To whom it may concern.

I wish to object to this proposal:

Routing the cables through a densely populated city is both expensive and unnecessary, an easier route would be through Hayling Island which is much less developed.

This scheme is unnecessary given the political drive towards self sufficiency for power generation, it would appear to be part of the London Laurndromat.

The Russian funding of political parties/ members of parliament in the UK should be illegal - it does not appear to be against the rules in the UK - UK funding of political activity in Russia is not allowed.
