

I moved away from Westleton 18 months ago, but lived there for a couple of years previously. I have known and loved the Dunwich/Sizewell area with a passion for 40 years. I am particularly interested in the extraordinary and wildlife of the area, together with its sheer beauty, peace and 'wildness'.

I am alarmed at the proposal to industrialize and ruin all this, and believe that it is wrong to even consider it. The devastating destruction will be matched by the astronomical cost of a means of power production which is now outdated. Outdated in terms of its massive cost, the length of time to construct it and for it to become carbon neutral, and in terms of its high environmental impact compared to the new sustainable green alternatives. I believe that it is foolish to build a nuclear installation on a vulnerable coastal location such as this, with rising sea levels already happening. The whole area will be unduly affected by the construction process over many years - this is unacceptable to residents living nearby, and again, for wildlife.

John Parsons