> Dear Planning Inspectorate,

> There are only 6 sites in the UK like Sizewell beach that are rich in vegetative coastal planting, but this unique place is now under threat from the plans to build Sizewell C and cover much of this important rare and valuable habitat with concrete.

>

> On Sunday 600+ protesters, marked out the boundary in the form of a human wall, to demonstrate what will be left of the beach at Sizewell if this ill thought out new nuclear power station is built. It was graphically clear that this build, which will be the biggest construction site in Europe, cannot help but have a massive detrimental effect on the flora, fauna, wildlife and of course wider environment and I worry that this form of nuclear power will probably be redundant technology by the time it is due to be finished in over a decades time.
