To whom it may concern,

In High School, you taught us that Nuclear power was not renewable. You taught us that we should look after our precious world we have been gifted to care for. You taught us that technology is now moving forward and that we have a chance to change the fate of this dying planet.

I feel betrayed.

You are about to waste £20 billion on building a Nuclear Power Station right next to a nature reserve. That was your chance to invest in budding new renewable power technologies. You could have shown my generation the way into a brighter future.

If anyone is reading this at all, I just want you to know that you are bringing us all down with you. You are just digging a bigger pit for my generation to try and find a way out of. Who is the real adult here?

You have time to rethink what you are about to do.

Yours faithfully,
Florence
