Reference : Development of wind turbines at Sweet lamb farm (Mynydd y Gwynt Ltd)

Sirs, I do not want to list all the arguments against wind turbines, I am sure you are well aware of all the facts. Instead, I would like to draw your attention to the moral and ethical aspect of the proposed development. Why do the farmers at Sweet Lamb want to erect huge wind turbines? Is it because of their concern of CO2 emissions? Hardly. They have massive rally complex on their land, emitting no end of car and noise pollution so to be claiming that they are "green" is frankly an insult to any thinking person. The motive is purely greed and I am saddened that nobody dares to state this fact. What is happening in the countryside is truly appalling – we are going back to the feudal system – the rich are getting richer, steamrolling over ordinary "hard working" people (as you like to call us). The upset these developments cause to locals seem to be immaterial. The loss of peace and tranquillity, visual and noise pollution is not going to stop the developers to pursue their final goal – a big fat profit.

I came to this country 46 years ago because of the oppressive government in my home country, where normal people were being trod on regardless of their needs and wishes. England seemed a haven then....But now? Yes, there are numerous meetings to show that the government is willing to listen. But what happens at these meetings? The locals are pitched against the highly articulate and skilful lawyers who don't give a hoot about the morals and ethics of the case, they are there to win no matter what because they are being paid. It makes me sick.

By the way, are you aware that this week there was yet another fatal accident on the road proposed for transport of the turbines?

So, I am asking you to throw this application out because that is the only decent decision you can make. The countryside and people in it matter more than some dubious monsters, so just say NO to this immoral and hypocritical proposal.

Yours

Jitka Novak (BSc Hon)
