1. I would like to ask what the purpose is of judging the host population's sensitivities.
2. Aren't all populations equally worthy of the best solutions, regarding siting, and mitigation?
3. How are rates of sexual infections, underage drinking, breastfeeding, and self-harm relevant to the population's sensitivities to projects such as this?

The applicant divides us into categories of sensitivity, recording that those of high sensitivity, as those listed above, are more likely to object to their developments. 'Normal' people can be sensitive too, and everyone should be treated the same. It appears from this data that Vattenfall may have chosen Necton on the grounds that we are not sensitive receptors.
