26. Essex Red Data List Species

Information contained in the Inventory

The Essex Red Data List was compiled in 2002 for English Nature (now Natural England), with the input of County Recorders and other county specialists and with an extensive period of consultation. The full list is available at www.essexfieldclub.org.uk/portal/p/Essex+Red+Data+List.

The list is an important compilation of Essex information, helping to inform and better enable biodiversity and planning decisions throughout the county. As an internet resource, the list has been updated, with changes listed on the website.

Inclusion of species on the list is guided by the following key criteria:

- In the national Red Data List (where one exists)
- Nationally Scarce/Notable (where there is an available definition and list).
- Species which are rare, declining and/or subject to a high degree of threat in Essex (and not in either of the above categories).

Depending on the degree of regional knowledge this is related to:

- Species recorded in few modern sites (X or fewer sites, since 19XX).
- Species with restricted distribution occurring in habitats under a high degree of threat nationally and/or within the county.
- More widespread species which have undergone a substantial decline in number or distribution since 19XX.
- Species which are extinct in Essex, and for which there is significant potential for re-establishment, either naturally or through intervention.

The values of X will vary for different taxonomic groups; County Recorders and other county specialists have used their knowledge to determine the threshold values for each particular taxonomic group in Essex.

In addition, Essex Red Data List Threat Statuses have been assigned to the Arachnida, aculeate Hymenoptera, Syrphidae, larger Brachycera, Orthoptera and Odonata taxonomic groups. These threat categories are defined* as:

Essex Endangered

- Species known as a single population within a single post-1980 1km² or only from threatened or vulnerable sites in Essex.
- Species believed extinct in Essex.

Essex Vulnerable

- Species known from only two populations in Essex.
- Essex Rare species which are restricted to habitats or sites known to be under threat in Essex.
- Species which only occur at sites in Essex known to be vulnerable.
- Species which have shown a continuous decline over the last twenty years and are now known to exist in less than 1% of the covered post-1980 1km² in Essex.

Essex Threatened

- Essex Scarce species with a Frequency Ratio of less than 1.5 and Tetrad percentage of less than 1.0 indicating widely isolated populations within the county.
- Essex Scarce species which are restricted to habitats or sites known to be under threat in the county.
- Species which have shown a continuous decline over the last twenty years.

Regionally Important

- Species which are important in a national context because Essex contains a significant proportion of the national populations.
- Species which are important in a national context because they have a close association with a specific nationally threatened habitat included in the Biodiversity Action Plan.
- Species which are important in a national context because they are dominant in or peculiar to a specific habitat for which Essex contains a large percentage of the national habitat.

Where a taxon not included in the list has been recorded from 6 or less of the 57 tetrads (10km squares) covering the Watsonian VCs 18 and 19 it has been accorded a provisional Essex Red Data List status (pListed) here.

27. Invasive Species

Information about invasive species

Invasive species may threaten habitats and species with biodiversity and nature conservation value. Where invasive species are present, action may or may not be appropriate to control their spread or to eliminate them from sites and habitats.

Invasive Species Action Plans are used to help coordinate the response to key invasive non-native species across England, Scotland and Wales. The plans provide a short and strategic overview identifying the key aims, objectives and actions. They can be seen on the Defra website at <https://secure.fera.defra.gov.uk/nonnativespecies/index.cfm?sectionid=92>

Action on invasive species

The appropriate response to the presence of an invasive species will vary depending on the species and the degree to which it is or may in the future cause damage to the ecology at the location.

Identification of invasive species

Identification of invasive non-native species is an essential part of invasive species management and guidance can be found on the Defra website at <https://secure.fera.defra.gov.uk/nonnativespecies/index.cfm?sectionid=47>

Invasive species records

Most existing records of invasive species in Essex are made during general recording, although there are plans to encourage targeted recording of these species in the future.

Where you have records of invasive species for the search area, please submit them to us by email to datasearch@essexfieldclub.org.uk or via our website at www.essexfieldclub.org.uk

Where invasive species have been recorded, their records are summarised in the following table.

Geological Site Information

The geological site database includes and describes geological sites which are of regional or local importance for their scientific, historical and/or educational value unlike the strictly scientific criteria applied to the SSSIs (Sites of Special Scientific Interest) which are of national importance. These are not 'second tier' sites but sites of regional and local value in their own right.

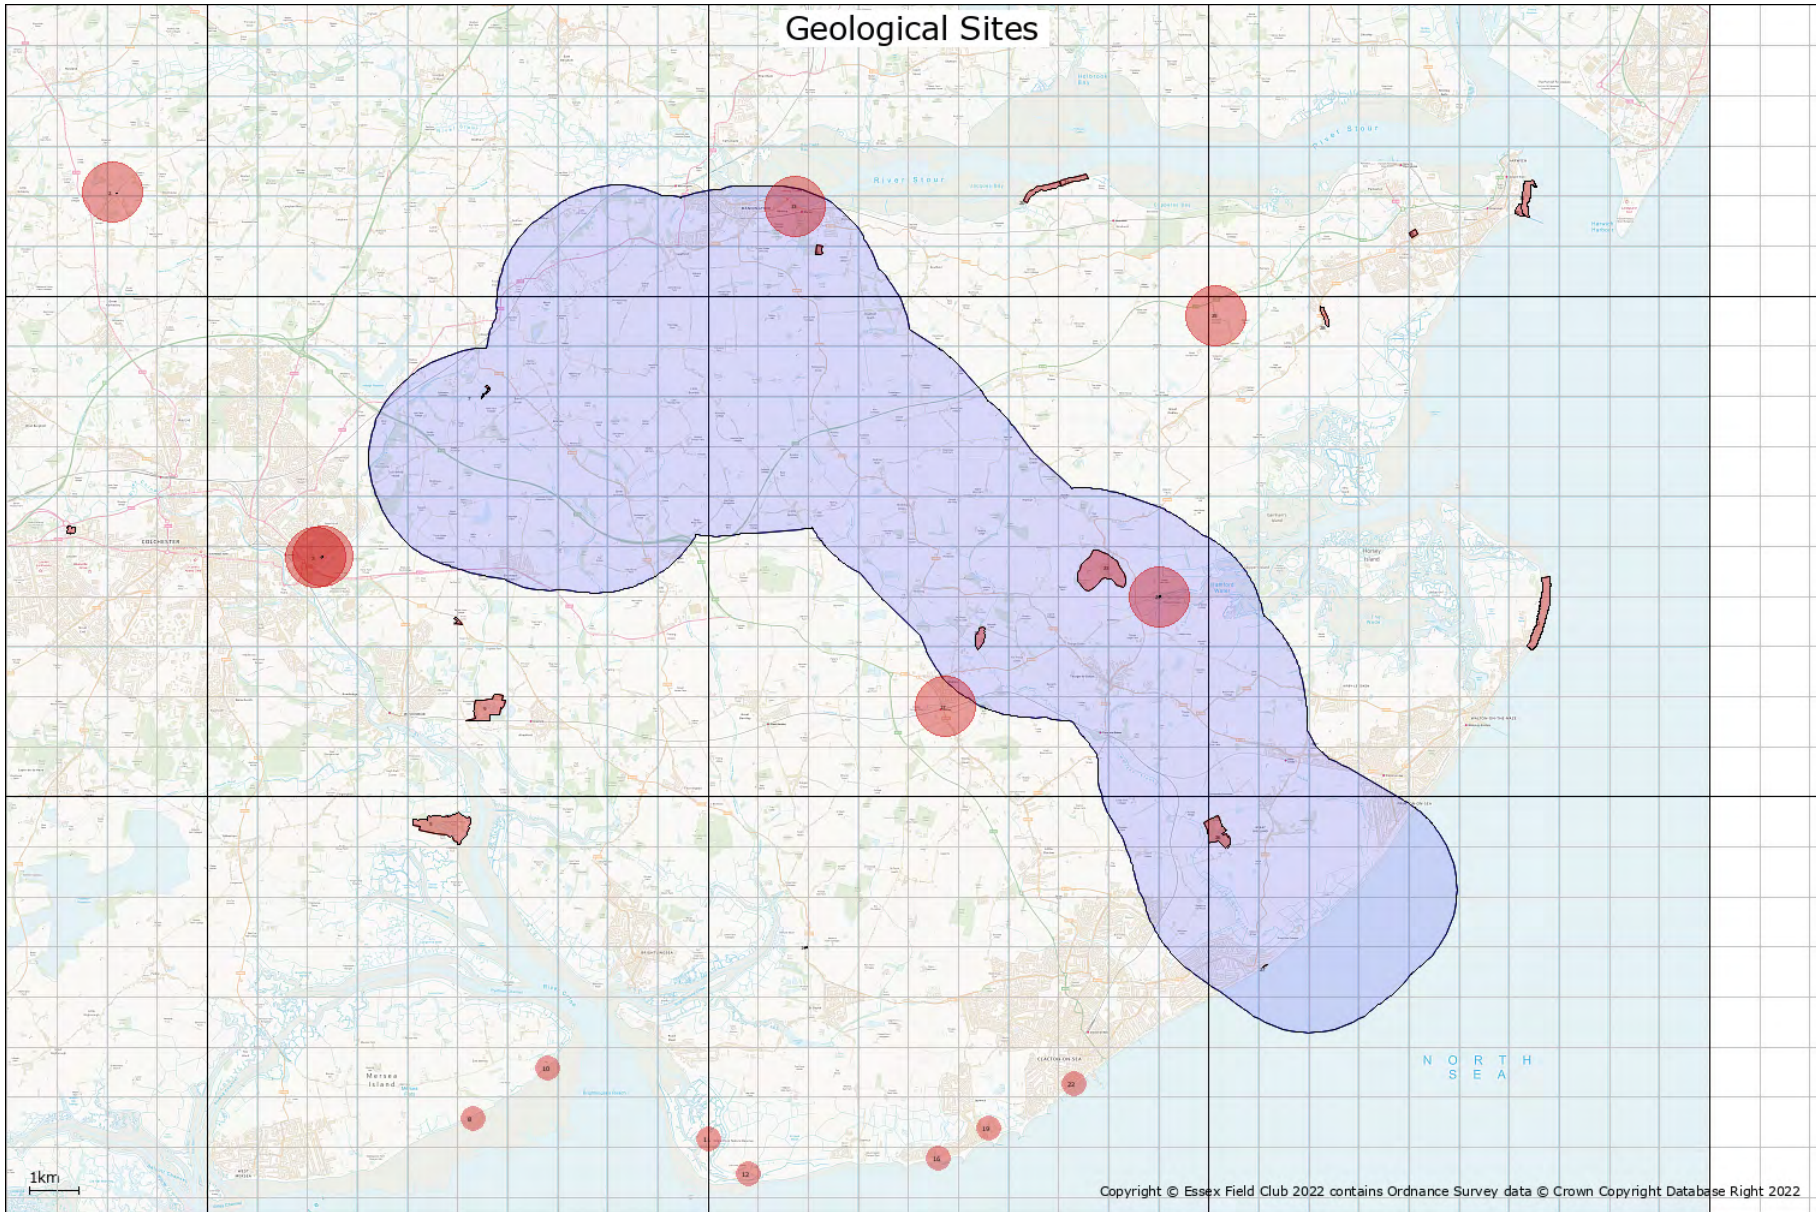

Some of these sites are being designated as Local Geological Sites (LOGS), formerly called Regionally Important Geological Sites, or have the potential to be so designated, and these sites are marked as such. Existing SSSIs which have been designated for their geological importance are also included in this database.

Note: Some of the sites in the geological site database are solely of historical interest as a record of an important or interesting discovery. There are also sites which are not strictly geological but nevertheless have a geological connection, for example buildings constructed of local stone. These sites have not been included in this report.

Although many of the sites listed are publicly accessible, inclusion of a site in this database does not imply any rights of access. Permission to visit must always be obtained from the relevant landowner.

Geological Site Information

1. Lexden Springs Nature Reserve, Notified Local Geological Site, TL973253

Site name: Lexden Springs Nature Reserve

Grid reference: TL 973 253

Brief description of site:

In Spring Lane, off Lexden Road, is a patch of ancient meadowland which is generally rich in wild flowers. Here a natural spring issues from the junction of the Kesgrave Sands and Gravels and the underlying London Clay.

The reserve is owned and managed by Colchester Borough Council and is accessible at all times. Car parking is available in Spring Lane.

See also the site account for Lexden Gathering Grounds.

2. Greenbank House Sarsen Stones, Potential Local Geological Site, TL981321

Site name: Greenbank House Sarsen Stones

Grid reference: TL 981 321

Brief description of site:

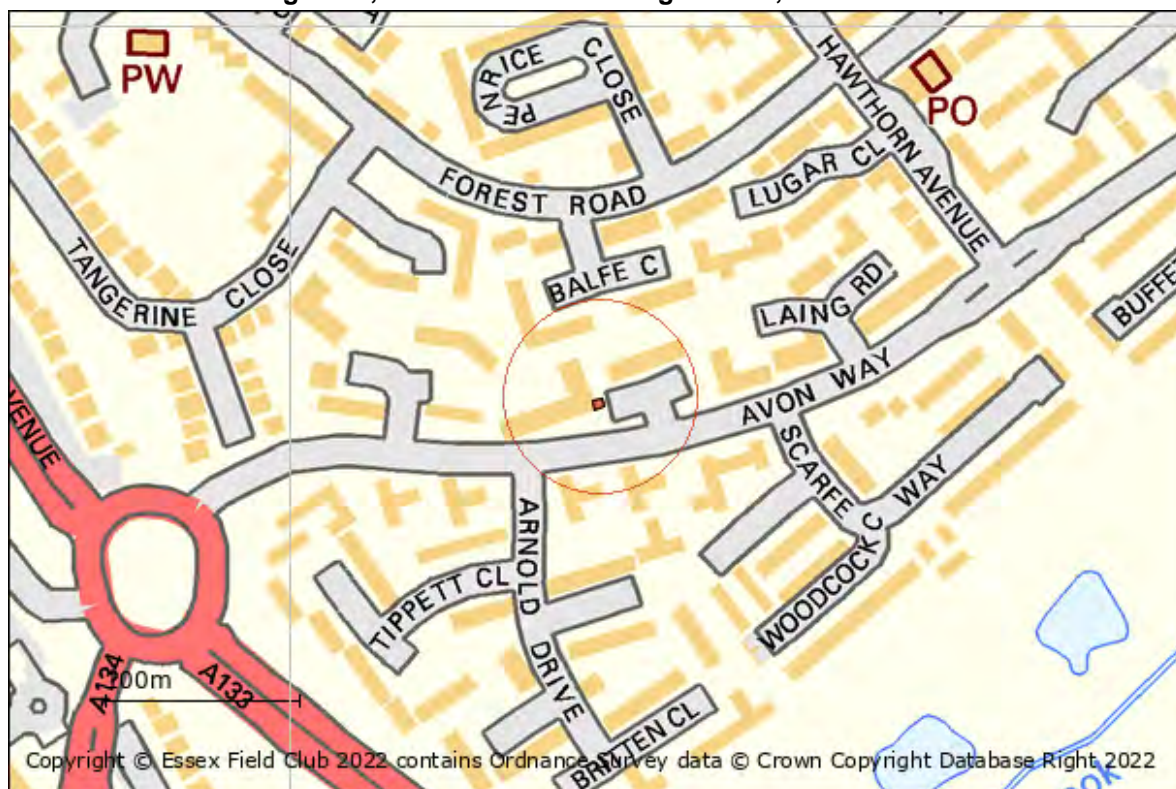

Four sarsen stones are situated by the entrance to Greenbank House in Boxted Church Road near the junction with Holly Lane. Each is about 90 x 60 x 40 cm in size and they can be clearly seen from the roadside. The garden of the house contains over 20 sarsens, each one brought here by the owner from farmland in the nearby Stour Valley. Greenbank House is a private residence.

Details

Sarsens are extremely hard boulders of sandstone formed around 55 million years ago when the climate of Britain was hot and a layer of sand beneath the surface of the ground became cemented with quartz. They are thus very resistant to erosion and have survived the rigours of the Ice Age. They originated on the chalk downland north and west of Essex and were carried here by rivers and glaciers. After retreat of the ice they became concentrated in river valleys.

The formation of silcretes (which includes sarsens and puddingstones) has been the subject of recent scientific debate. Research has compared the conditions under which sarsens and puddingstones may have been formed with the present day climate in the Kalahari Desert and parts of Australia.

3. Greenstead Puddingstone, Potential Local Geological Site, TM02162481

Site name: Greenstead Puddingstone

Grid reference: TM 0216 2481

Brief description of site:

A very fine, colourful boulder of Hertfordshire puddingstone, one of the best in Essex, sits on a concrete plinth in the communal garden of a block of flats in Avon Way, only a few metres from the pavement. It was formerly on full view but unfortunately it has now been enclosed within the communal garden and a hedge has grown up completely obscuring it from view.

Details

A very fine and colourful boulder of Hertfordshire puddingstone (1.5 x 0.75 metres in size) sits on a concrete plinth in a communal garden adjacent to 160 Avon Way. It was formerly clearly visible from the public thoroughfare between 160 Avon Way and Bennett Court. Unfortunately a hedge has now been planted in front of the boulder and it is now not visible from the footpath. It can, however, be seen by entering the communal garden. At the front of 160 Avon Way is a small sarsen stone on the grass - also on a concrete plinth.

This puddingstone is a puzzle as it is in mint condition and shows no sign of being transported by a river or an ice sheet. It was presumably found when the housing estate was constructed in the 1960s. The fact that it was placed on a plinth clearly means that it was valued at the time and it is therefore very sad that it is no longer visible.

This is not the only important boulder in Greenstead. About 150 metres to the east of the puddingstone a large sarsen stone sits next to a bus stop in Avon Way - see separate site entry (Greenstead Sarsen Stone - TM 0231 2483).

The origin of Hertfordshire puddingstone

Hertfordshire Puddingstone was formed around 55 million years ago when the climate of Britain was hot and a layer of pebbles beneath the surface of the ground became cemented with quartz. They are thus very resistant to erosion and have survived the rigours of the Ice Age. They originated in Hertfordshire, hence the name, and were probably carried to Essex by the River Thames when it flowed north of its present course. However, the distribution and abundance of Hertfordshire puddingstone in parts of Essex suggests that some occurrences may have a local Essex source.

The formation of silcretes (which includes sarsens and puddingstones) has been the subject of recent scientific debate. Research has compared the conditions under which sarsens and puddingstones may have been formed with the present day climate in the Kalahari Desert and parts of Australia.

The Greenstead puddingstone in its original setting. It has now been completely obscured.

4. Greenstead Sarsen Stone, Potential Local Geological Site, TM02312483

Site name: Greenstead Sarsen Stone

Grid reference: TM 0231 2483

Brief description of site:

A sarsen stone stands by a bus stop in Avon Way. It is very unusual to see a sarsen stone in such an urban setting.

Details

A fine large fragment of a sarsen stone (0.9 x 0.9 metres in size) stands upright by a bus stop in Avon Way. It is the largest of several sarsen stones in the vicinity, presumably all found when the housing estate was constructed in the 1960s.

About 150 metres to the west of this stone is a boulder of Hertfordshire puddingstone - see separate site entry (Greenstead Puddingstone - TM 0216 2481).

5. Fingringhoe Wick Nature Reserve, Notified Local Geological Site, TM045195

Site name: Fingringhoe Wick Nature Reserve, Fingringhoe.

Grid reference: TM 045 195

Brief description of site:

Fingringhoe Wick Nature Reserve is a former gravel pit with good exposures of glacial gravel.

Summary of the geological interest:

Fingringhoe Wick was a working gravel quarry, known as Freshwater Pit, between 1924 and 1959. Visible in many places are mounds and banks of glacial sand and gravel (known as Upper St. Osyth Gravel) which was deposited some 450,000 years ago by colossal torrents of meltwater issuing from the Anglian ice sheet, the edge of which was then situated only 12 kilometres west of here. At that time ice covered almost all of Britain to a maximum thickness of over one kilometre.

The gravel therefore provides evidence of an exceptionally cold period of the Ice Age, a time when Essex was barren of virtually all life - in stark contrast to the abundant flora and fauna that can be seen at Fingringhoe Wick today. A permanent cliff of gravel exists in the centre of the reserve where pebbles of several different rock types can be collected. These rocks provide clues to the origin of the ice and the rocks over which the ice sheet passed.

There are fine views of the Colne estuary from the edge of the reserve.

Scientific interest and site importance

Fingringhoe Wick has been cited as providing exposures of Lower St. Osyth Gravel and Upper St. Osyth Gravel (Bridgland 1994). The Lower St. Osyth Gravel was laid down by the River Thames when it flowed through central Essex, to the south of Colchester, and out across the low-lying land that is now the North Sea to become a tributary of the Rhine. Shortly afterwards the Anglian Ice Sheet blocked the valley of the Thames upstream and diverted the river to its present course. As the ice sheet spread into central Essex the former Thames valley became a channel for glacial meltwater which flowed across the Fingringhoe area laying down the Upper St. Osyth Gravel, a typical glacial outwash deposit. The junction between the two gravels therefore represents the point at which the Thames ceased to flow through central Essex. The Thames at that time was a very large, braided river and its diversion must have been a catastrophic event.

Fingringhoe Wick is important because there are very few other sites in Essex where glacial gravel (in this case the Upper St. Osyth Gravel) can be so readily examined. The Lower St. Osyth Gravel is not now visible here although it is occasionally revealed in the active quarry to the north of the site.

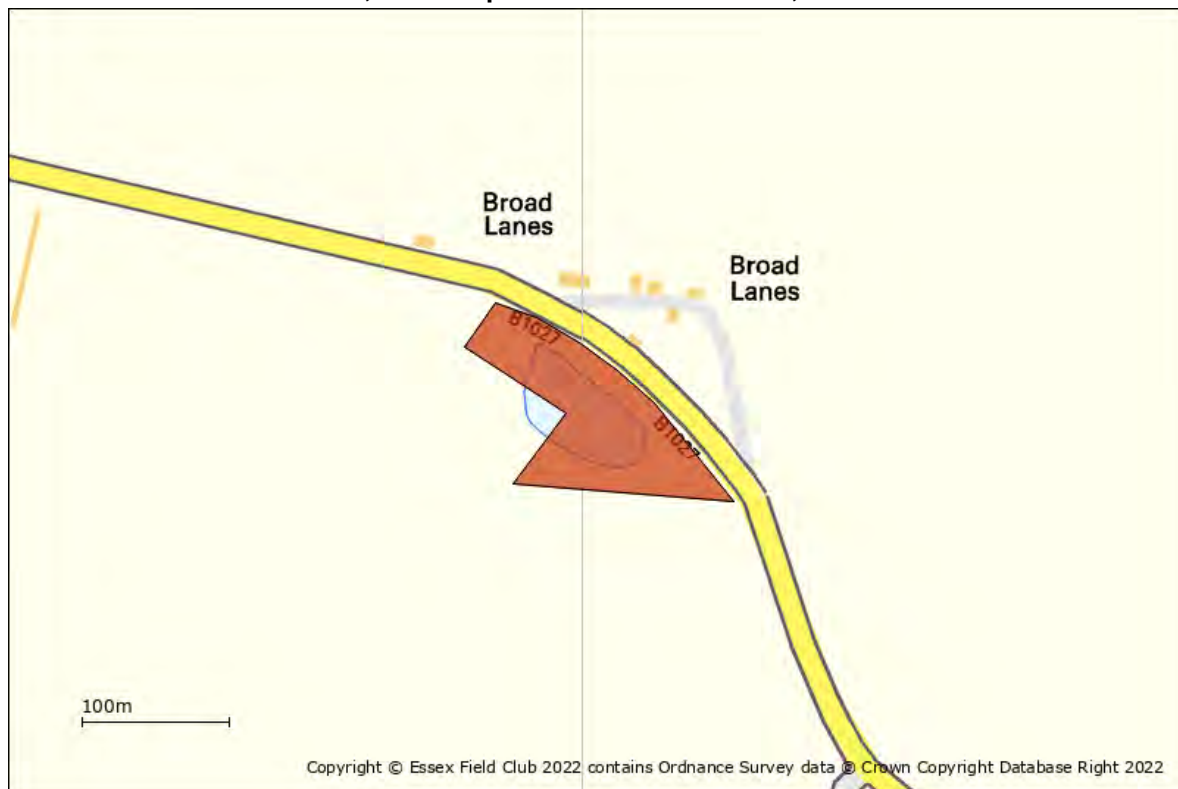

Other information

Fingringhoe Wick was purchased by the Essex Wildlife Trust in 1961. For its biodiversity importance the site is included within the Colne Estuary Site of Special Scientific Interest (SSSI). There is ample car parking but no access to the site by public transport.

6. Wivenhoe Gravel Pit SSSI, Site of Special Scientific Interest, TM050235

Site name: Wivenhoe Gravel Pit SSSI

Grid reference: TM 050235

Summary of geological interest

Site of Special Scientific Interest designated for the importance of its geology. Wivenhoe Gravel Pit is the type locality for the Wivenhoe Gravel, which was laid down by the Thames when it flowed across this area before being diverted to its present course by ice during the Anglian glaciation.

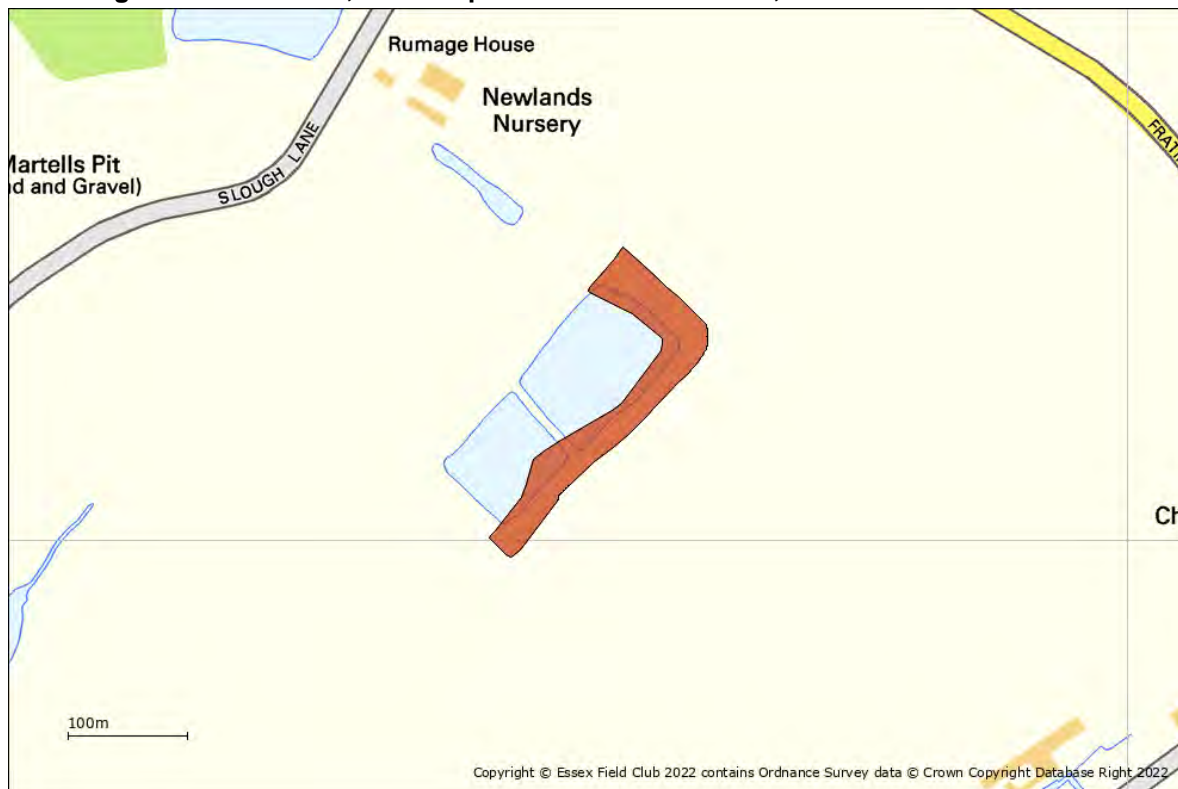

Site description

Wivenhoe Gravel Pit is the type locality for the Wivenhoe Gravel, part of the Kesgrave Sands and Gravels which was laid down by the Thames when it flowed across this area before being diverted to its present course by ice during the Anglian glaciation. The Wivenhoe Gravel was laid down during two cold stages of the Ice Age and interbedded within the gravel is an organic silty clay containing fossils from a warm or temperate climate. These include plants, pollen from temperate-climate trees, and beetle remains. This clay represents an intervening interglacial stage but unfortunately the fossils it contains are not yet sufficiently distinctive to identify which interglacial stage. However, judging from the position of the Wivenhoe Gravel in the old Thames terrace sequence it is likely to be the temperate interval that immediately preceded the Anglian glaciation (this glaciation brought about the diversion of the Thames about 450,000 years ago). Much work is therefore required before this interval, recognised in recent years elsewhere in Britain but undefined, can be fully evaluated. Its status as a full interglacial has also yet to be established and it may be just an interstadial (a short-lived temperate-climate event in a predominately cold period). It is possible that the sediments date from the latter part of the Cromerian interglacial, as defined by the Cromer Forest-bed in Norfolk.

The position of these temperate sediments in the Thames gravels is therefore highly significant, making Wivenhoe Gravel Pit an important source of evidence for reconstructing the evolution of the Thames.

Of additional interest at Wivenhoe Gravel Pit was the discovery of two flint flakes in the interglacial sediments that may have been worked by humans. If they represent a period of human occupation at Wivenhoe it will be the earliest evidence of humans anywhere in Essex and over 500,000 years old. They would be about the same age as the human tools and remains discovered at Boxgrove in Sussex, which are thought to represent occupation by Homo heidelbergensis, a species of human that is probably a direct ancestor of the Neanderthals.

7. Ardleigh Gravel Pit SSSI, Site of Special Scientific Interest, TM053280

Site name: Ardleigh Gravel Pit SSSI

Grid reference: TM 053 280

Summary of geological interest

Site of Special Scientific Interest designated for the importance of its geology.

Site description

Martells Quarry at Ardleigh is an important site for reconstructing the past climate and landscape of Essex. The quarry reveals a pale, buff gravel, known as Ardleigh Gravel - part of the Kesgrave Sands and Gravels - which was laid down in cold conditions during the Ice Age by the Thames when it was a very large river flowing across the Tendring peninsula. This is confirmed by beds of organic clay containing fossils of cold-climate plants such as mosses, grasses and sedges. The upper surface of the Ardleigh Gravel contains casts of ice wedges indicating arctic conditions. Also within the Ardleigh Gravel are beds of silty, dark grey organic clay, which had clearly been deposited in temperate (interglacial) conditions as they contained plant fossils including the remains of deciduous trees such as birch, oak, elm and alder and the remains of beetles. The Ardleigh Gravel is therefore a sandwich of sediments with deposits from two cold climate episodes represented here (the Ardleigh Lower Gravel and Ardleigh Upper Gravel), separated by an interglacial period.

The interglacial deposits are of considerable significance and may be unique in Britain. The deposits cannot be dated per se, but by comparison with other sites, and by reference to the geological sequence in the Netherlands, they are thought to belong to the Cromerian Complex. They could be as much as 700,000 years old. It is possible that the interglacial deposits here may justify designating Ardleigh quarry as the type site for a new early Pleistocene interglacial stage.

On top of the Ardleigh Gravel is the Martells Gravel, consisting of brown/orange gravel and sand with a slightly different stone content to the Ardleigh Gravel below (more Rhaxella chert - probably reworked from the Red Crag of the area). Evidence in the gravel of the river current direction shows that the water was flowing towards the west or south west which was a reversal of the direction of the current when the Ardleigh Gravel was deposited. The Martells Gravel was therefore not deposited by the Thames but by a local river flowing from the north-east. In the 1960s a skull fragment of a ziphoid whale was discovered at Ardleigh which was typical of those found in the Red Crag at Walton-on-the-Naze. This bone must have been reworked and transported here from the Walton area by this river.

At the very top of the Martells Gravel is a deformed, iron-rich deposit that is thought to represent a complex ancient soil horizon. This soil horizon has been found elsewhere and is known as the Valley Farm Soil, the redness indicating soil formation under a warm, dry Mediterranean climate. The deformation was caused by later periglacial activity, overprinting it with a cold climate soil known as the Barham Soil.

8. Coopers Beach (Restaurant Site) (part of Colne Estuary SSSI), Site of Special Scientific Interest, TM053136

Site name: Coopers Beach ('Restaurant Site') (part of Colne Estuary SSSI)

Grid reference: TM 053136

Brief description of site:

Beneath the beach shingle here is a 'channel' infilled with sediments dating from the Ipswichian interglacial period (125,000 years old) containing fossils including hippopotamus bones (see also Cudmore Grove, East Mersea). The sediments are beneath the beach and therefore not normally accessible.

Details

In addition to Cudmore Grove (see separate site record) there are other references to fossil-bearing sediments at East Mersea. These refer to a site 1.5 kilometres south-west of Cudmore Grove. The earliest of these was by Samuel Hazzledine Warren (1872-1958), a geologist from the Essex Field Club, who recorded his findings in the 'Essex Naturalist' between 1917 and 1933 referring to a 'hippopotamus-bearing elephant bed' at this site.

Little attention was given to this site until it was 'rediscovered' in the 1980s. Although the early records referred to foreshore exposures of fossiliferous deposits, in the 1980s there appeared to be only a wave-cut foreshore platform of London Clay. However, an excavation through the beach revealed that fossiliferous sediments still survive although, due to erosion, they are thinner now than in the early twentieth century. They have produced a distinctive fauna of fossils characteristic of the Ipswichian Interglacial Stage, about 120,000 years ago, that is identical to that previously found at the 'hippo site' on the foreshore at Cudmore Grove and includes, straight-tusked elephant, bison, giant deer and hippopotamus. Due to a lower sea level the Thames at this time was flowing below its present level and so these sediments must be associated with an early course of the River Blackwater. It is speculated that there might be a substantial area of fossiliferous deposits beneath the adjacent caravan site.

This locality has been named the 'Restaurant Site' after the cafeteria, serving the occupants of the caravans, that overlooks the beach.

9. Cockaynes Wood Nature Reserve, Potential Local Geological Site, TM056218

Site name: Cockaynes Wood Nature Reserve

Grid reference: TM 056 218

Brief description of site:

A recently restored gravel pit in Thames gravels, now a publicly-accessible nature reserve.

Summary of geological interest

Cockaynes Wood Nature Reserve includes part of the former Villa Quarry, a gravel pit which had exposures of Wivenhoe Gravel. Wivenhoe Gravel, part of the Kesgrave Sands and Gravels, was laid down by the Thames about 500,000 years ago when it flowed across this area before being diverted to its present course by ice during the Anglian glaciation (see separate site entry for Wivenhoe Gravel Pit). It was deposited just upstream of the point where the Thames joined a former course of the River Medway.

It may be possible to conserve or create a permanent cliff of gravel in the former pit which would be an extremely useful teaching aid for students and for public interest and education.

Other information

The reserve is jointly managed by Essex Wildlife Trust and Cockaynes Wood Trust, who lease the site from Brett Aggregates.

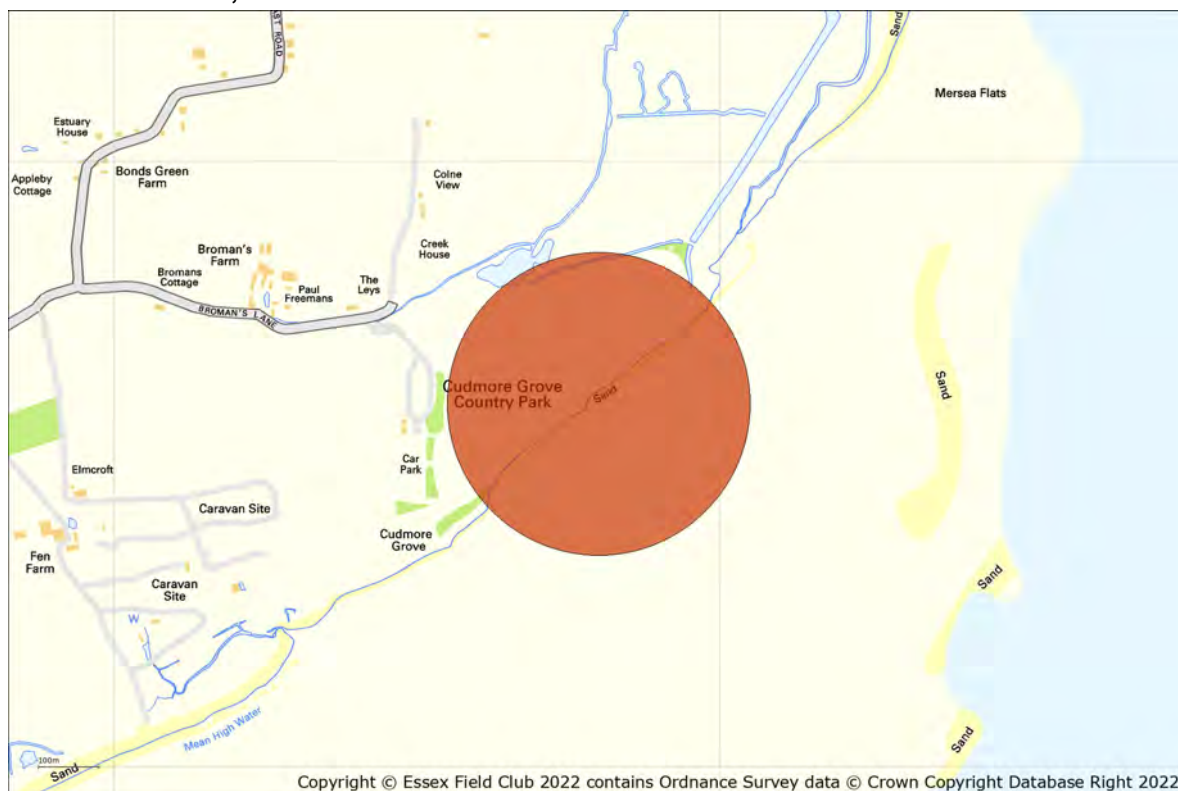

The vehicular site entrance is off Wivenhoe Road, Alresford, just north of the Railway bridge. The main vehicle gate is usually locked, but there is still parking space for about 6 cars. The site can be reached by walking down the track from the gate. Please be aware that this track is not a public right-of-way; it may sometimes be closed to the public.

10. Cudmore Grove Cliffs and Foreshore (part of Colne Estuary SSSI), Site of Special Scientific Interest, TM068146

Site name: Cudmore Grove Cliffs and Foreshore (part of Colne Estuary SSSI)

Grid reference: TM 068146

Brief description of site:

The cliffs at Cudmore Grove Country Park provide superb exposures of gravels laid down by the Thames-Medway River during a glacial period 300,000 years ago. Organic sediments at beach level sometimes yield fossils, including fossil wood and mammal bones, that indicate that they were deposited during an interglacial period. Also exposed on the foreshore are deposits from a more recent interglacial period, the Ipswichian interglacial (120,000 years old), and known as the 'hippo site' due to the presence of hippopotamus bones.

Details

Cudmore Grove Country Park, at the eastern end of Mersea Island, is one of the most important geological sites in Essex. Ice Age deposits were first discovered here in 1906 when fossil shells were discovered in a well in the floor of a gravel pit. The site of this pit is probably the overgrown hollow now known as The Dell near the entrance to the Country Park. In those days the cliffs were stable and covered with vegetation but erosion by the sea in recent decades has created the excellent coastal exposures that now exist. In the 5 to 6 metre high cliffs can be seen layers of sand and gravel laid down by the combined Thames-Medway River 300,000 years ago as it flowed north-east towards Clacton and out across what is now the North Sea to become a tributary of the Rhine.

Although the rapidly eroding cliffs are of geological interest the scientific importance of Cudmore Grove did not become apparent until 1979 when Essex amateur geologists Bill George and Stephen Vincent discovered mammal bones and teeth in hollows on the London Clay foreshore. Although they found only a small number of these fossils in a restricted area they comprise a distinctive fauna that includes, straight-tusked elephant, bison, giant deer and hippopotamus which has led to this part of Cudmore Grove being called the Hippopotamus Site. The fauna appears to be identical to that previously found beneath the beach at the so called Restaurant Site about 1.5 kilometres south-west of Cudmore Grove and is characteristic of the Ipswichian Interglacial Stage about 120,000 years ago. Due to a lower sea level the Thames at this time was flowing below its present level and so these sediments must be associated with an early course of the River Blackwater.

The prime interest of this site, however, is a large channel-like depression in the London Clay at the base of the cliffs and exposed on the foreshore that was discovered just three years later in 1982. The depression is a former river channel associated with the Thames-Medway River or one of its tributaries and contains layers of gravel, silt and clay with numerous bones and shells. It is thought to have been infilled some 300,000 years ago during the Purfleet interglacial stage (Marine Isotope Stage 9). Known as the Cudmore Grove Channel it contains a great diversity of fossils making it one of the richest Ice Age sites in Britain. A layer of clay in the channel was packed with shell fragments and contained the bones of beaver, macaque monkey, wolf and bear and a large number of small animals such as rodents, bats, birds, frogs, toads and fish. In fact the fauna of small vertebrates at this site is the richest ever found in Britain, providing a comprehensive picture of the wildlife in eastern Essex 300,000 years ago. The channel has also provided information about the vegetation of the area at this time due to the presence in the deposit of pollen and fragments of wood including two fossilised tree trunks that were found to be protruding from the beach. At the very base of the channel a worked flint flake in fresh condition was found which indicates that humans, probably an early species of Neanderthal, were also living here at this time

Cudmore Grove therefore provides not only a fine exposure of sand and gravel laid down by the long-lost Thames-Medway River but also important fossiliferous river channel deposits from two distinctly different interglacial periods. The Country Park is owned by Essex County Council and is open from dawn until dusk. There is a car park and an information room.

11. St Osyth Marsh (part of Colne Estuary SSSI), Site of Special Scientific Interest, TM100132

Summary

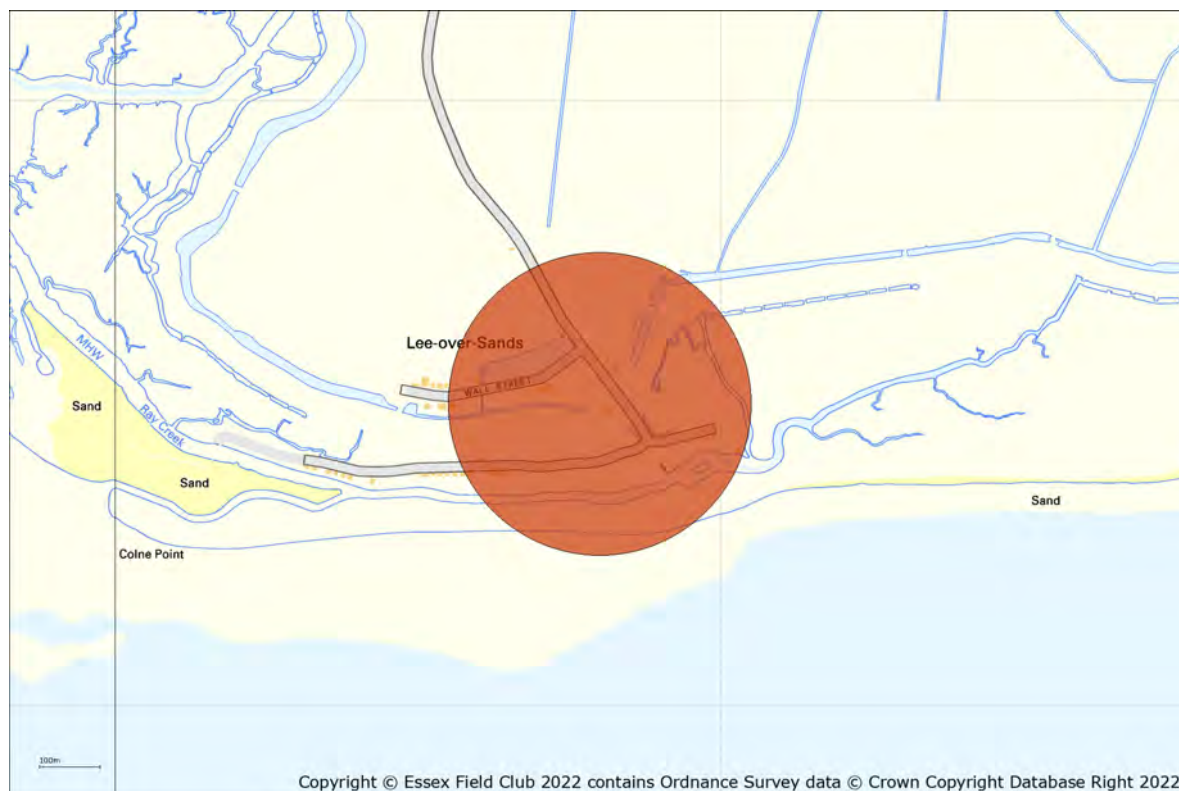

St. Osyth Marsh is an important site for documenting the changes in salt marsh growth, and is one of a few marsh areas in Britain to have been dated. It is part of Colne Estuary SSSI. The importance of the geomorphology of the marsh is included in the Site of Special Scientific Interest designation. The site extends from TM 090 144 to TM 130 126

Site description

St. Osyth Marsh is an important site for documenting the changes in salt marsh growth, and is one of a few marsh areas in Britain to have been dated. The age of the marsh is about 4,300 years, the date provided by the analysis of a peat seam preserved in grey-black clay at the site. The characteristic assemblage of features - creeks, saltpans and salt marsh cliff - are all present here, and reflect the maturity of the marsh system. The saltpans have been intensively researched by geomorphologists, and provide much information relating to the formation and development of this unique coastal landform.

St. Osyth Marsh is also one of the few places in Britain where the development of wave-built protective beach ridges called cheniers has been described fully. Here the cheniers consist mostly of sand and gravel, unlike those further south on the Dengie peninsula which are made up almost entirely of shells. A rigorous study of the beach ridges at St. Osyth Marsh was carried out recently to determine their true form and origin using ground-penetrating radar and the results published in the journal Sedimentary Geology in 2003.

12. Colne Point Shingle Spit (part of Colne Estuary SSSI), Site of Special Scientific Interest, TM108125

Summary

Colne Point, near St. Osyth, is the best example in Essex of a shingle spit. It is part of Colne Estuary SSSI. The importance of the geomorphology of the shingle spit is included in the Site of Special Scientific Interest designation.

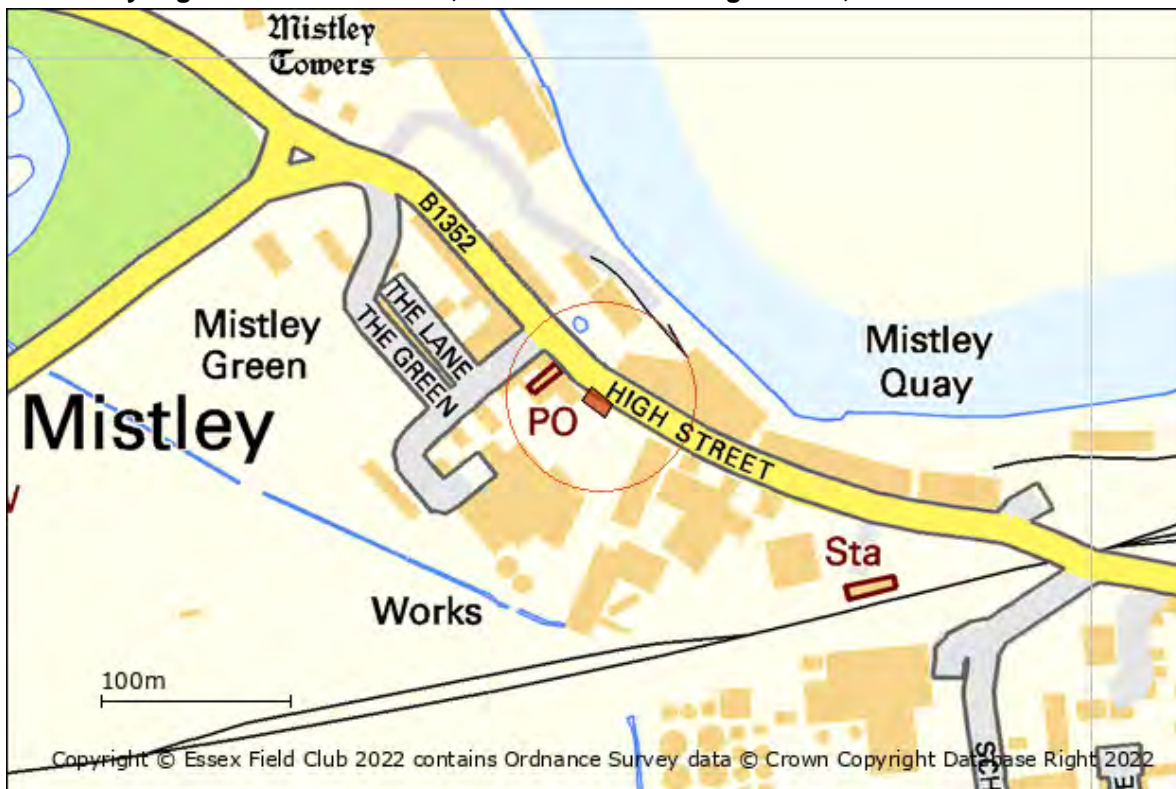

Site description

Colne Point, near St. Osyth, is the best example in Essex of a shingle spit. The spit is 4 kilometres long and is all that remains of a much larger area that existed in the 19th century but has now mostly been developed by the seaside holiday industry. It is of great interest for studying the movement of shingle and the development of shingle structures. It is an Essex Wildlife Trust reserve. Day permits to visit are available from the Trust.

13. Mistley High Street Cobble Wall, Notified Local Geological Site, TM1174131822

Site name: Mistley High Street Cobble Wall

Grid reference: TM 11741 31822

Brief description of site:

Wall of considerable historic and geological interest.

Summary of geological interest

On the south side of Mistley High Street, east of the Post Office, is a brick wall, probably over 150 years old, with a section composed entirely of rounded cobbles. What makes this wall particularly unusual is the very high proportion of exotic rock types such as granite, lava, dolerite and gneiss. There are even several cobbles of rhomb-porphry, a distinctive lava from Larvik, in the Oslo region of Norway.

It was originally thought that the stones in the Mistley Wall might have been gathered locally. This is because 'exotic' rocks do occur in Essex, having been brought here during the Ice age by the Anglian Ice Sheet, some even from Norway. However, the great variety of rock types in this wall made this unlikely.

The answer was found following extensive research by geologist Ian Mercer who established from various written records and oral testimonies beyond any doubt that these rocks were brought to Mistley from Norway in ballast in trading ships in the early 19th century.

In the wall there are 280 million year old lavas from Larvik, near Oslo, with their distinctively-shaped crystals. These have provided a rock-solid link between Mistleys maritime past and this surviving, historic wall. A valuable display of geology as well as history lesson, the Mistley wall is a treasure of the Essex coast. It has considerable local historical conservation value.

The full story of the wall, and how the link with Mistleys maritime history was established, can be found in the December 2014 issue of the Magazine of the Geologists association (Mercer 2014).

14. St Osyth Pit SSSI, Site of Special Scientific Interest, TM11951703

Summary

Site of Special Scientific Interest designated for the importance of its geology.

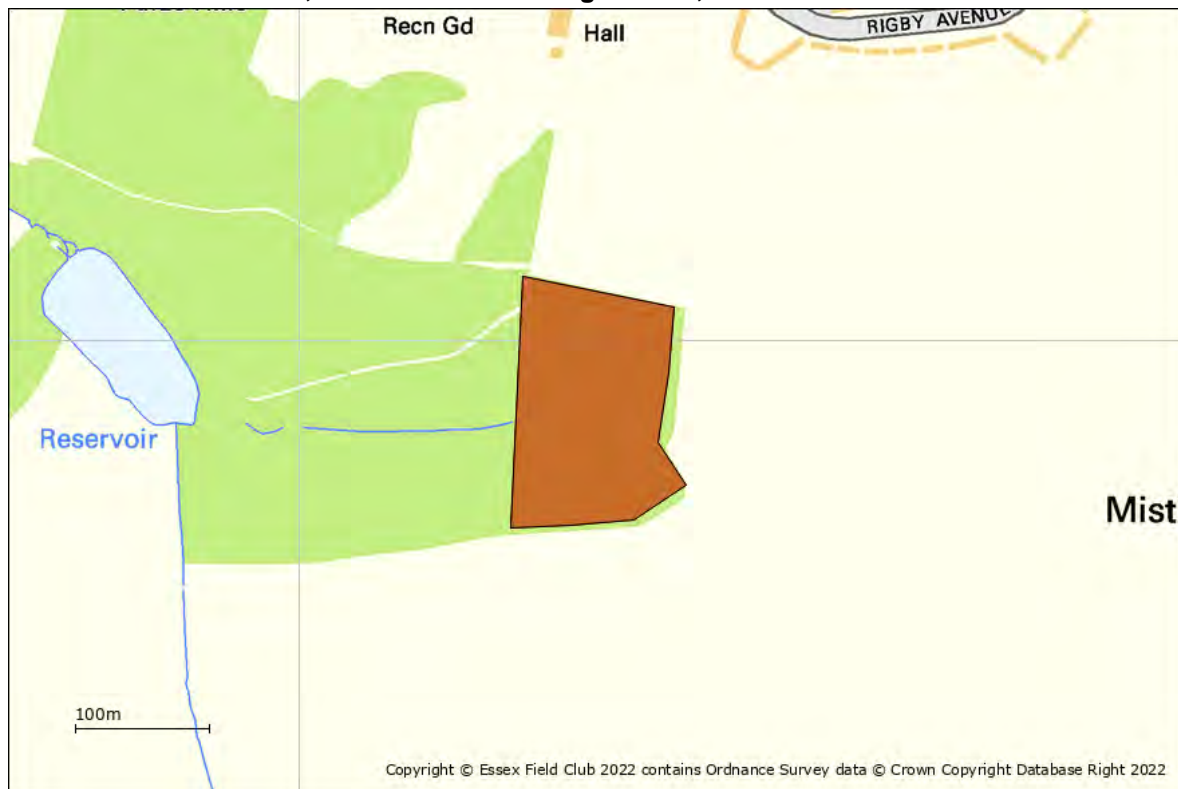

The St. Osyth Gravel Pit SSSI is a triangular overgrown hollow which has been saved from landfilling but unfortunately no sand and gravel is now visible. This is an important site for providing evidence of the diversion of the Thames

Site description

About 450,000 years ago a catastrophic change affected the Thames causing it to alter its course and adopt the route we know today. The gravel at St. Osyth pit is of two types: the Lower St. Osyth Gravel, which dates from just before the Thames was diverted, and above this is the Upper St. Osyth Gravel which was laid down after the Thames had disappeared from the area. This is clearly indicated by the stone content of the Lower Gravel which is typical of that deposited by the early Thames (the Kesgrave Sands and Gravels). The Upper Gravel, on the other hand, has fewer of the exotic stone types of the early Thames, such as quartz and quartzite, and more Rhaxella chert, brought in by meltwater streams from the nearby Anglian ice sheet.

The deposits reveal just how rapid the diversion was as the Thames suddenly ceased to flow through central Essex as a result of being blocked upstream in Hertfordshire and west Essex by the Anglian ice sheet. Gravel of the same age is present in the cliff at Holland-on-Sea. St. Osyth lies upstream from the confluence with the Thames and Medway rivers whereas Holland lies within the area of the confluence.

15. Furze Hill Gravel Pit, Notified Local Geological Site, TM122309

Site name: Furze Hill Gravel Pit

Grid reference: TM 122 309

Brief description of site:

Former gravel pit in woodland adjacent to the Essex Way. The site is of geological interest with potential for geological education and research.

Site description

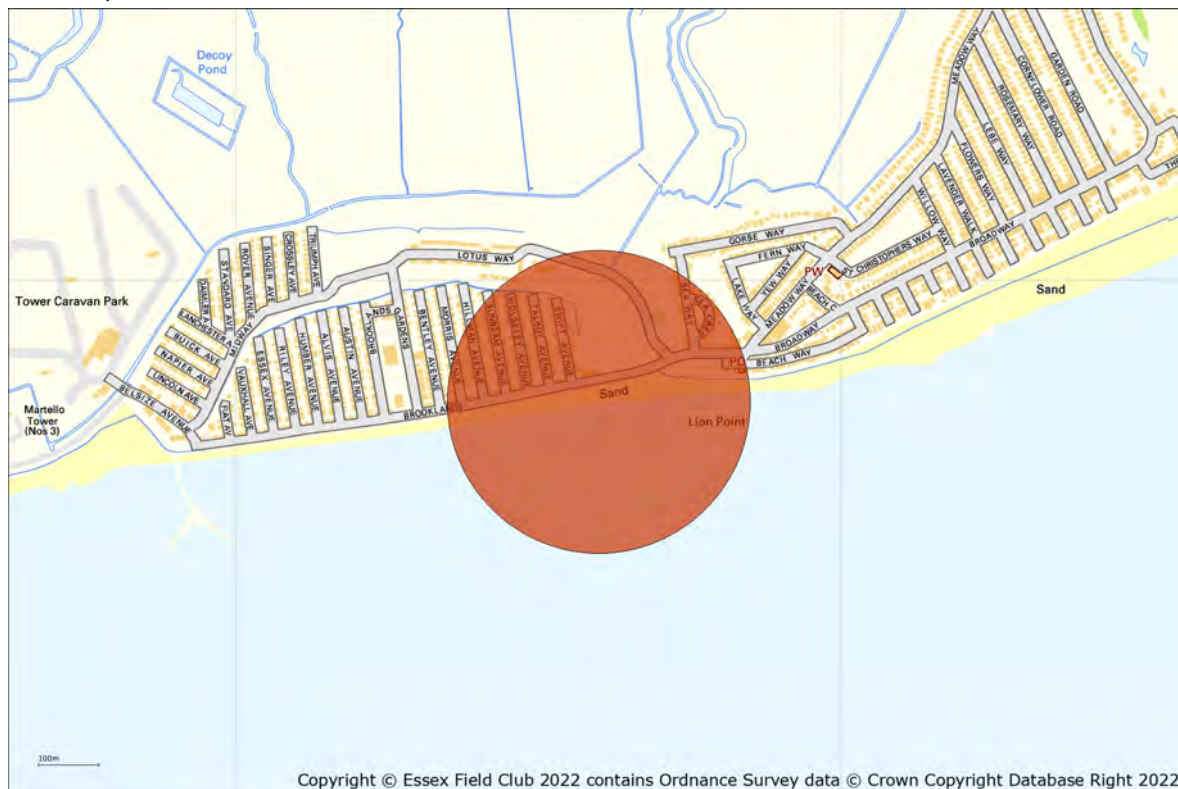

Waldringfield Gravel is the oldest deposit in Essex from the former course of the River Thames and could be as much as 800,000 years old. However, no exposures of this gravel are known.

The Ordnance Survey map of 1897 shows a gravel pit in woodland in Mistley Park, south-east of Furze Hill, which, according to the geological map, is situated on the Waldringfield Gravel. Today, evidence of this gravel working can be seen throughout the eastern half of the wood with several steep banks and hollows. A coarse, iron-stained gravel can be seen in small excavations made by rabbits, and pebbles from the gravel are on the paths and in the roots of fallen trees. The gravel appears to contain a high proportion of exotic pebbles that clearly have been carried some distance by the Thames, such as well-rounded pebbles of white vein quartz (from North Wales).

The woodland does not appear to have a name and so the name Furze Hill Gravel Pit has been adopted for this site. The wood is publicly accessible and the Essex Way, a long distance public footpath, runs along the northern boundary. Gravel is more clearly seen in the northern part of the wood close to the footpath and also near the southern boundary. In the centre of the wood there are areas of fine-grained gravel, which may be left over from gravel grading and processing on site in Victorian times.

16. Jaywick Foreshore (part of Clacton Cliffs and Foreshore SSSI), Site of Special Scientific Interest, TM146128

Summary

Site of Special Scientific Interest designated for the importance of its geology. The site consists of interglacial 'channels' that were formerly exposed on the foreshore at Jaywick. They are located at TM 146 128 and TM 155 130.

See Clacton Cliffs and Foreshore SSSI for more details of this site.

Description of sites

Although the Clacton channel deposits were discovered and extensively described in the nineteenth century they were only known from the site of their original discovery the cliffs at Clacton. It was Essex amateur geologist Samuel Hazzledine Warren who recognised that part of the Clacton sequence also occurs on the foreshore at Lion Point, Jaywick (TM 146 128) and was part of the same channel. The deposits filling this channel have yielded fossils of animals such as lion, rhinoceros and straight-tusked elephant and are thought to have been deposited by the early Thames during the Hoxnian interglacial stage, about 400,000 years ago. The route of this channel between Jaywick and Clacton is designated as a Site of Special Scientific Interest (SSSI) (see entry for Clacton Cliffs and Foreshore SSSI).

Coincidentally, a further, but younger, channel was discovered on the Jaywick foreshore in the late 1990s by David Bain at TM 155 130. This channel was cut into the London Clay and contained a white marl deposit which yielded a tooth of a straight-tusked elephant, the base of an antler of a giant deer, various bones, teeth and horns of aurochs (giant ox), and a finger bone of a brown bear. Various lines of evidence point to this channel being deposited by a local river during the Ipswichian interglacial stage, about 120,000 years ago.

Both channels have unfortunately now been obscured by the build up of shingle as a result of the construction of the fish-tail coastal protection structures.

17. Weeley Borehole (site of), Potential Local Geological Site, TM1473721833

Site name: Weeley Borehole (site of)

Grid reference: TM 14737 21833

Brief description of site:

Site of the Weeley borehole which was sunk in 1896 in search of coal. It was one of the few boreholes to reach the 'basement of Essex', the hard Palaeozoic rocks that underlie the whole of the county, over 300 metres below the surface. The site of the borehole is on the northern side of the stream about 100 metres north-east of Weeley railway station.

History of the borehole

In the latter part of the nineteenth century, the discovery of a deep coalfield near Dover stimulated the search for coal in East Anglia. The Eastern Counties Coal Boring and Development Syndicate was formed for this purpose and they sunk a borehole at Weeley in 1896, their previous borehole being at Stutton on the Suffolk side of the Stour estuary. The borehole penetrated the deep Palaeozoic basement rocks at a depth of over 330 metres (1,100 feet) and continued to 372 metres (1,221 feet) before the project was finally abandoned. As at Harwich, the basement was found to be Silurian rocks (approx. 420 million years old) and not the younger Carboniferous coal measures that had been hoped for. A further borehole at Great Wakering near Southend was suggested but finance was not forthcoming. Directors and shareholders had invested a considerable amount of money in the venture but the syndicate was finally wound up a year or so later.

A section of the core from the bottom of the borehole is on display in Colchesters Natural History museum and another has been preserved in the collection of the Essex Field Club. The site of the borehole is on the northern side of the stream about 100 metres north-east of Weeley railway station.

18. Dakings Pit , Potential Local Geological Site, TM154233

Site name: Dakings Pit

Grid reference: TM 154233

Brief description of site:

Former gravel pit in the garden of Hillhouse Farm which has yielded Palaeolithic artifacts.

Summary of geological interest

A rich assemblage of Palaeolithic artefacts has been recovered from this former pit in the garden of Hillhouse Farm. The deposits are mapped as Cooks Green Gravel (laid down by the Thames-Medway River 600,000 years ago) but it has been suggested that the gravel may be a post-Anglian deposit of the nearby Holland Brook.

In 1970 a 3 metre wide face was cleaned at the north-east end. The pit is historically important; archaeologists such as Leakey, Oakley, Warren and Wymer carried out research here from 1933 to 1970.

The 'pit' has now been more or less levelled and survives as a depression. However, a face could be created with a digger if any future investigation is required.

19. Clacton Golf Course (part of Clacton Cliffs and Foreshore SSSI), Site of Special Scientific Interest, TM156134

Site of Special Scientific Interest designated for the importance of its geology.

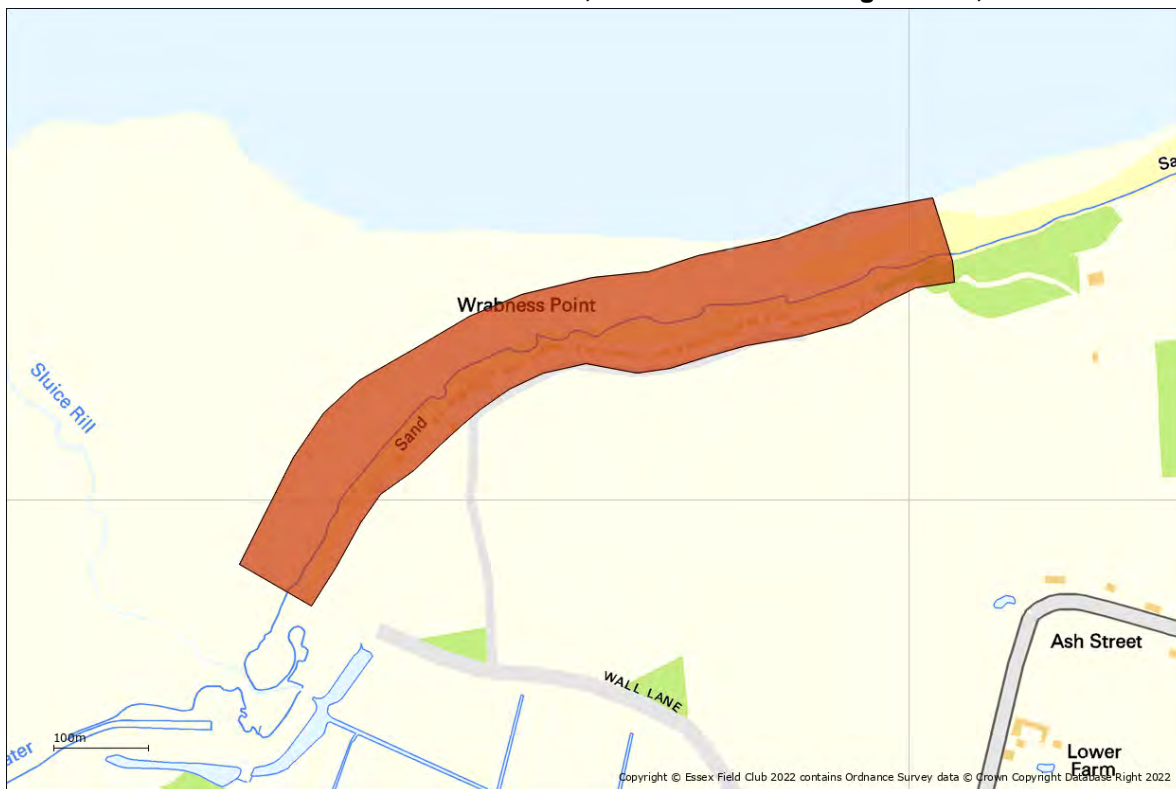

The SSSI consists of three individual sites as follows:

TM 173 143 (Clacton cliffs and foreshore), TM 156 134 (Clacton golf course) and TM 146 128 (Jaywick foreshore).

Description of sites

See Clacton Cliffs and Foreshore for a full description of all three sites.

20. Wrabness Brickearth Cliffs and Foreshore, Notified Local Geological Site, TM163319

Site name: Wrabness Brickearth Cliffs and Foreshore

Grid reference: TM 163319

Brief description of site:

Cliffs of brickearth on the River Stour at Wrabness have yielded bones of mammoth and elephant since at least the beginning of the eighteenth century.

Site description

Brickearth dating from an interglacial stage of the Ice Age is exposed in the cliff and foreshore eastwards from Wrabness sluice to beyond Wrabness Point. The brickearth has yielded bones of elephant and mammoth and has produced fossils since at least the beginning of the eighteenth century. Fossils are, however, very rare and are often in a very friable condition requiring great skill to extract and conserve them.

The earliest record is from 1701 when the Reverend Robert Rich, rector of Wrabness, found at Wrabness "diverse bones of an extraordinary bigness" and concluded that they were probably bones of elephants brought over by Emperor Claudius for use in his wars with the Britons. Bones of mammoth and straight-tusked elephant were also found here following a cliff fall in 1906.

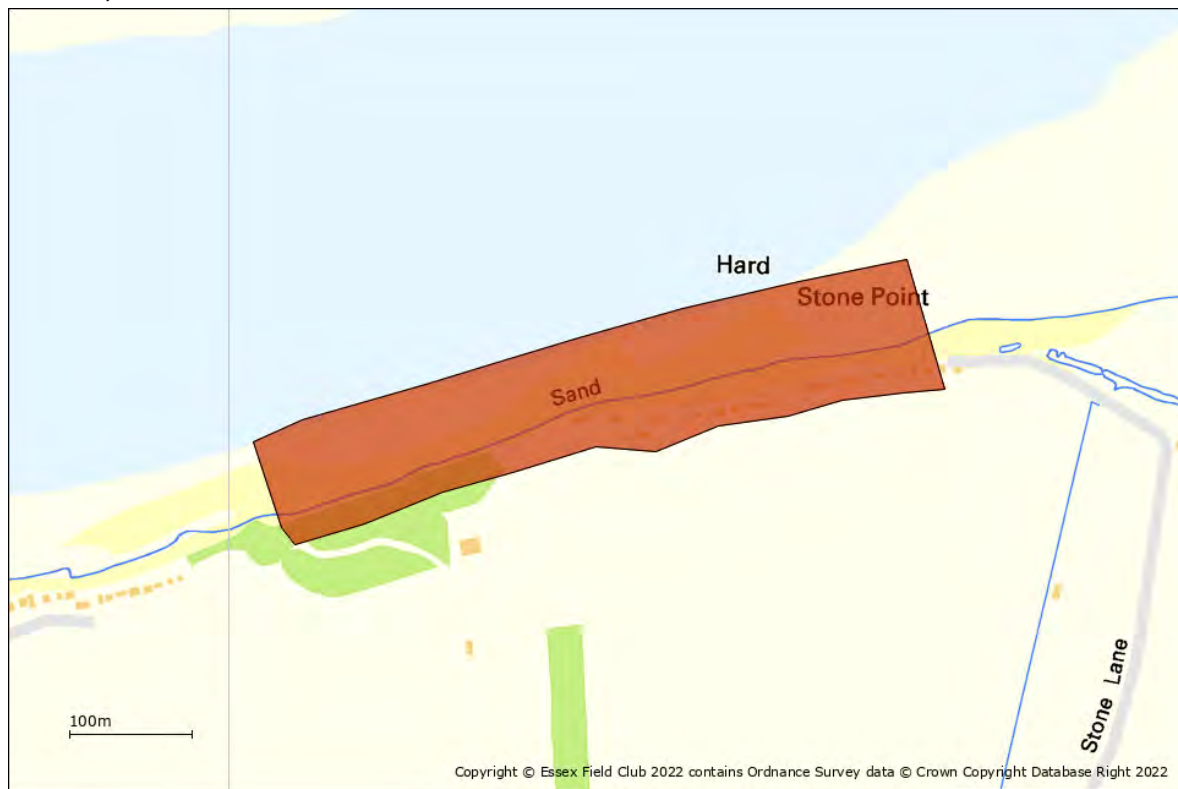

The brickearth was originally thought to have dated from the Ipswichian interglacial stage (120,000 years ago), but is now thought to belong to the preceding interglacial stage which corresponds with Marine Isotope Stage 7 (approximately 200,000 years ago). The brickearth contains lenses of gravel and fine sand. Some of the brickearth on the foreshore near Wrabness sluice was reported to contain fossil shells.

Also along this section of the coast are terrace gravels from the River Stour which contain rocks derived from the Kesgrave Sands and Gravels (early Thames gravels). On the beach are occasional fossils derived from the Red Crag, which presumably originate from a former capping of basal Red Crag gravel at the top of the London Clay cliffs to the east.

21. Wrabness London Clay Cliffs (part of Stour Estuary SSSI), Site of Special Scientific Interest, TM172323

Site name: Wrabness London Clay Cliffs (part of Stour Estuary SSSI)

Grid reference: TM 172323

Brief description of site:

Site of Special Scientific Interest designated for the importance of its geology. The cliffs at Wrabness provide the best onshore exposure of the Harwich Formation. They are the highest vertical cliffs in Essex.

Site description

The London Clay cliffs on the River Stour at Wrabness are the highest vertical cliffs in Essex and consist of the upper part of the Eocene Harwich Formation and the lower few metres of the Walton Member of the London Clay. They provide the best onshore exposure of the Harwich Formation.

The Wrabness cliffs are of particular interest because they contain a complete sequence of bands of volcanic ash, which probably originated from volcanoes in Scotland. These ash bands are present from the Harwich Stone Band to the top of the formation. Over 30 separate ash layers occur throughout some 10 metres of clay and silty clay, which was deposited in a subtropical sea about 50 million years ago. The succession has been dated partly by analysing the iron-rich minerals in the ash, which have preserved the direction of the Earth's magnetic field when the ash was laid down. This indicates that the succession is the same age as the Oldhaven Beds of Kent. The exposure of the Harwich Formation at Wrabness is of national importance as it provides the most complete succession of volcanic ashes attesting to the influence of early Eocene volcanism in southern England.

The same Eocene sediments contain an important fossil flora. Although the fossil fruit and seed flora from Wrabness is limited by comparison with some other sites, the importance of the Wrabness flora is in its mode of preservation. Here, some of the fruit and seeds are preserved in concretions as opposed to the carbonaceous preservation or preservation in iron pyrite that occurs elsewhere in the London Clay. This form of preservation is particularly important, as much detail has been retained which would otherwise have been obscured by the growth of pyrite. The preservation of these plant fossils in concretions has also protected them from the distortion that would have occurred as a result of shrinkage or through compression on burial. Wrabness has a great potential to provide new and significantly different insights into the structure and anatomy of the fossil floras of the London Clay.

The Wrabness cliffs in some places show faults in the London Clay, which are records of prehistoric earthquakes. A fault was visible in the 19th century and illustrated in the 1885 geological survey memoir. It was obscured by a cliff fall but is said to be still visible at TM 170 322.

22. Clacton Cliffs and Foreshore (part of Clacton Cliffs and Foreshore SSSI), Site of Special Scientific Interest, TM173143

Site of Special Scientific Interest designated for the importance of its geology.

The SSSI consists of three individual sites as follows:

TM 173 143 (Clacton cliffs and foreshore), TM 156 134 (Clacton golf course) and TM 146 128 (Jaywick foreshore).

Description of the sites

Clacton is one of the principal prehistoric sites in Europe and a site of considerable international importance. The story starts in the 1830s when Essex amateur geologist John Brown discovered channel deposits exposed in the West Cliff at Clacton, close to the pier and below the Martello tower on Marine Parade West. The channel deposits were seen to cut down through the Lower Holland Gravel (laid down by the Thames-Medway River) and into the London Clay. Brown had discovered what is now considered to be a key site in British Quaternary (Ice Age) studies because it allows the Quaternary geological sequence of the Lower Thames in south Essex to be linked to that of East Anglia. The site in those days was an eroding cliff (before it was obscured by sea defences) and it yielded some spectacular fossils including the bones of lion, rhinoceros and elephant. It has been designated as a Site of Special Scientific Interest (SSSI).

The Clacton Cliffs and Foreshore SSSI, as it is known, is a complex series of sediment-filled channels which intersect, but bear no relation to, the present coastline and consist of three separate sites (see map and section). The two main sites are where the channels were formerly exposed - the cliffs and foreshore at Clacton and the foreshore at Lion Point, Jaywick. The third site is between the two at Clacton Golf Course. A further site (not part of the SSSI) is the former Butlins holiday camp. Detailed descriptions can be found in The Quaternary of the Thames by David Bridgland (1994).

The channel is actually the bed of the Thames-Medway River when it flowed through here about 400,000 years ago. The sediments in the channel have provided a diverse fossil record with molluscs from freshwater and estuarine environments and a vertebrate record ranging from bones or teeth of vole, water rat and beaver to boar, deer, horse, lion, rhinoceros and straight-tusked elephant.

There is also a sub-species of fallow deer unique to Clacton called Dama dama clactoniana. The sediments consist of freshwater clays, sands and gravels overlain by estuarine clays and peats which allow geologists to reconstruct the conditions when the deposits were laid down, with freshwater beds being overcome by a rise in sea-level. Pollen recovered from the freshwater sediments, tells us that the surrounding countryside at this time consisted of oak, elm and alder forest - indicating a warm-temperate climate - which declined in warmth in the estuarine beds as conifers and firs became dominant. Some of the molluscs are species (the Rhenish fauna) that indicate a link between the River Thames and the River Rhine. The combination of flora and fauna at Clacton give the deposits a particular character which enables the temperate, or interglacial, stage they belong to, to be distinguished from older and younger interglacial stages. In particular a link can be made to interglacial deposits at Hoxne in Suffolk, which gives its name to the interglacial stage, the Hoxnian, which occurred about 400,000 years ago. One of the pollen types present cannot be related to any species known today and it is referred to as Type X, which was thought to be indicative of the Hoxnian, though this now is challenged (see entry for Walton-on-the-Naze cliffs).

Evidence for early human occupation

The Clacton channel is also uniquely important for evidence of early humans. Clacton is the type site of the Clactonian Palaeolithic industry; a simple flint-working industry, with flakes struck off larger flints, leaving cores. No hand-axes have been found. The flint tools are from the Freshwater Beds in the channel and they represent the earliest undisputed evidence of human presence in Essex (but see entry for Wivenhoe Gravel Pit and Westcliff in Southend-on-Sea district). The tip of a wooden spear, made of yew, was also found in the cliffs, which is the oldest man-made wooden object in the world. Clacton man was not a modern human (Homo sapiens) and was not Neanderthal (Homo neanderthalensis), but an ancestor of the Neanderthals and probably related to an earlier British human species known as Heidelberg man (Homo heidelbergensis).

Controlled archaeological excavations were carried out at the golf course in 1934, which yielded 190 flint artefacts. In 1969 and 1970 a further series of excavations were made on the golf course along a line north-west to south-east across the southern bank of the channel. These yielded over 1200 artefacts, many of which were in mint condition, in other words they had not been blunted or otherwise damaged by incorporation into later deposits. In fact, in some cases the flints could actually be fitted back together (refitted), indicating not just that humans were in this area, but that they were actually living where the golf course is now, about 400,000 years ago, using the simplest technology. Because of their fresh condition, some of these tools have been analysed for microscopic signs of wear on the surfaces to try to establish how they were used and what they were used for. The results of this micro-wear analysis confirmed that this site was a hunting/butchery location. Experiments have found that the wear on the surfaces of stone tools formed by working different materials have distinctive appearances and can be distinguished from one another. The slicing of meat associated with the butchering of animals produces a distinctive polish known as meat polish and this was found on some of the Clacton tools together with probable evidence of the working of wood and bone, and the scraping of animal hides.

The work of Samuel Hazzledine Warren

Although the Clacton channel deposits were discovered and extensively described in the nineteenth century they were only then known from the site of their original discovery. It was Essex amateur geologist Samuel Hazzledine Warren who recognised that part of the Clacton sequence occurs on the foreshore at Lion Point, Jaywick and was part of the same channel. Much of our present knowledge of the channel deposits can be credited to Warren who devoted a considerable proportion of his life's work to these deposits and to the Clactonian flint industry. It was Warren who found the tip of the wooden spear in 1911. Warren also collected a large number of fossils including a very small jaw of a straight-tusked elephant which he identified as belonging to an unborn individual. At the time of Warren's discoveries there were others who were also collecting fossils from the cliffs, such as local amateur geologist Harold Picton of Clacton College, who assembled a fine collection of mammal bones and teeth that he exhibited when he led a field trip to Clacton for the Essex Field Club in 1911.

Current research

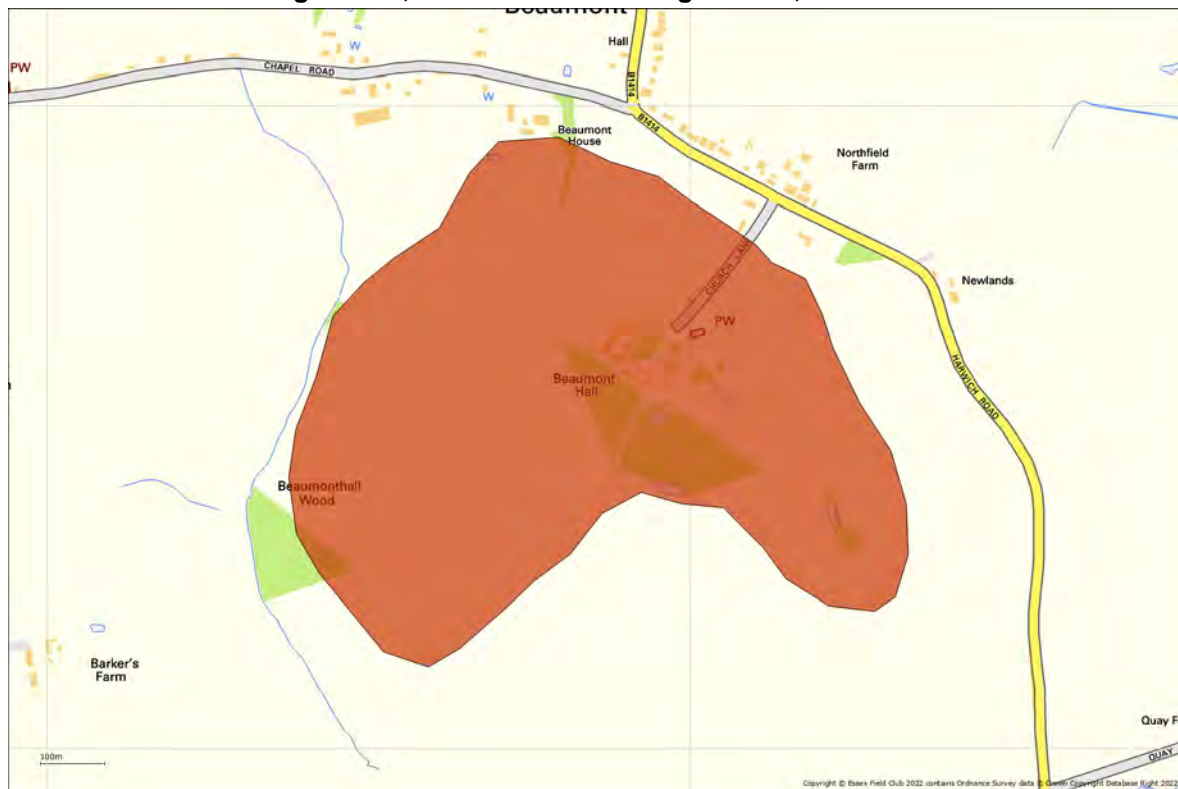

Work on the Clacton Channel sequence is far from over. This account is, of necessity, brief and omits much detail and argument, leaving a number of incomplete explanations. There are several channels in the complex and the evidence from these does not always agree; also the composition of the younger Wigborough Gravel (also laid down by the Thames-Medway River) which overlies the channel deposits is not the same as the Wigborough Gravel elsewhere on the Tendring peninsula, allowing debate as to its relation to the main body. Most interesting of all is the enigmatic Clactonian flint industry, with its curious and puzzling lack of hand-axes which are so common at older and younger Palaeolithic sites.

Unfortunately the West Cliff at Clacton is now landscaped and the Jaywick foreshore is obscured by the build up of shingle brought about by the fish-tail coastal protection structures.

23. Beaumont Red Crag Outlier, Notified Local Geological Site, TM180246

Site name: Beaumont Red Crag Outlier

Grid reference: TM 180246

Summary of geological interest

Site of geological interest with potential for geological education. The high ground at Beaumont Hall is capped with an outlier of shelly Red Crag which is visible in rabbit burrows and on footpaths. The site is also of importance in the history of geology. Any excavations in the area should be recorded. Site is private land and accessible only on public footpaths.

Site description

An isolated patch, or outlier, of Red Crag, about a quarter of a square mile in size, caps the top of the hill occupied by Beaumont Hall. It is one of the few fragments of a once continuous deposit of Red Crag across north Essex that has been almost entirely destroyed by erosion. The Red Crag in this part of Essex consists of loose sand with abundant fossil shells and the fossils of other marine animals that lived in the Red Crag Sea that existed about 2 million years ago.

The Red Crag at Beaumont was first brought to the attention of the scientific world by the well-known Essex geologist John Brown of Stanway, who obtained over 90 species of fossil shells from a pit near the south-eastern extremity of the outlier and privately published a list of them in 1846. At the end of the nineteenth century the amateur geologist Frederick Harmer (1835-1923) carried out a detailed study of the fossils of the Red Crag (see entry for Little Oakley) and re-opened Brown's pit where he succeeded in finding more than 260 species. Most of these were characteristic of the Walton Red Crag but a few were Arctic species which were rare or absent at Walton, indicating that this outlier may be slightly younger than the Walton Crag. With the permission of the landowner Harmer also dug a hole near the south-western limit of the Beaumont outlier which revealed 5 or 6 feet of Red Crag resting on London Clay. With the help of a labourer 7 or 8 tons of Crag sand were sifted and from this several species were encountered that were not found at the previous pit. Harmer published a detailed account of his work at Beaumont and elsewhere in the Quarterly Journal of the Geological Society in 1900.

Shelly Red Crag was formerly exposed in the sides of the pond near the church and in other temporary excavations made as part of the running of Beaumont Hall Farm. Farm workers would often come across the typical Red Crag gastropod Neptunia contraria that is known as the left-handed whelk because it spirals in the opposite direction to almost all other known gastropods. At Walton, the normal right-handed specimens also occur but at Beaumont these were apparently unknown to the farm labourers and Harmer reports that they had formulated a theory for this: Before the flood, everything was left-handed!

In 1900 the mineral content of the Red Crag at Beaumont was analysed by treating a 25 gram sample with concentrated hydrochloric acid. What remained was 50% quartz but the other 50% contained a rich assemblage of other minerals, some of which are familiar gemstones. Along with the more common rock-forming minerals such as feldspar and mica were rarer minerals such as zircon, rutile, kyanite, and ilmenite together with yellow crystals of corundum and green and blue grains of tourmaline. There were also tiny red garnets that were so plentiful that the heavy concentrate had a strong pinkish colour. Grains of topaz have also been found in the Red Crag although none were recorded from the Beaumont sample. The presence of such minerals in the Red Crag is evidence that these sands were derived from metamorphic rocks, probably from the erosion of the Scottish mountains, and may have been recycled several times over hundreds of millions of years before being deposited on the floor of the Red Crag Sea. As the Red Crag continues to be eroded, here and at Walton-on-the-Naze, these minerals will end up on to the floor of the North Sea the next stage in a continuous rock cycle.

The former Red Crag exposures at Beaumont are no longer accessible but fossil shells can be seen in places scattered on arable fields, such as by the public footpath east of Beaumont Hall Wood. Red Crag sand and shells can also often be seen thrown out of animal burrows in the ditch bank alongside the footpath west of Beaumont Hall.

24. Beaumont Quay Limekiln, Potential Local Geological Site, TM19022402

Site name: Beaumont Quay Limekiln

Grid reference: TM 1902 2402

Brief description of site:

The only remaining limekiln in Essex. Linked to the chalk quarrying industry. Beaumont Quay is also of interest as it is constructed from stones originally taken from London Bridge.

Details

The circular brick limekiln at Beaumont Quay is the only complete limekiln surviving in Essex. The quay was built in 1832 but the limekiln was almost certainly added later, probably in 1869-70. It was disused by the early 1920s. Limekilns were usually built in chalk quarries to be close to the raw material used for making lime but in coastal areas more permanent and substantial kilns were built in harbours and wharfs where chalk and coal for the kiln could be brought in by sea.

Beaumont Quay has another feature of geological interest. The stones forming the edge of the quay are from the old London Bridge, constructed between 1176 and 1209, which was the first London Bridge to be built of stone. The bridge stood for over 600 years, finally being demolished in 1831, with some of the stone coming here to Beaumont Quay. The stone is called Merstham Stone, better known as Firestone, a fine-grained sandstone of Cretaceous age from the Upper Greensand of Merstham in Surrey. The bridge that replaced it in 1831 was built of Dartmoor granite and it was this bridge that was sold and reconstructed in Arizona in 1967 when it was replaced with the present London Bridge.

Essex County Council owns the limekiln, The limekiln and quay are a scheduled ancient monument.

The limekiln is a listed building. The following is an extract from the Historic England website:

At Beaumont Quay the remains of the 19th century quay are combined with those of a largely intact lime kiln as well as a store building. The lime kiln is also a rare example of an East Anglian form, surviving in very good condition, and is the only one of its type (mixed feed) to survive in this area.

25. Hill House Sarsen Stone , Potential Local Geological Site, TM20142964

Site name: Hill House Sarsen Stone

Grid reference: TM 2014 2964

Brief description of site:

Single sarsen stone adjacent to a roadside wall. Sarsen stones are extremely rare in the Tendring District.

Summary of geological interest

Against the boundary wall of Hill House is a sarsen stone about 1 metre high, 90 centimetres wide and just over 20 centimetres thick.

Sarsens are boulders of extremely hard sandstone that were formed about 55 million years ago during the Palaeocene period in sandy strata called the Reading Beds that occur on top of the Chalk.

Most sarsen stones in Essex were carried here by the Anglian ice sheet which covered most of Britain during the coldest period of the Ice Age, some 450,000 years ago. Sarsens are usually found in North Essex and Suffolk and it is unusual to find one this far east. It is possible that this stone was carried here from the North Downs of Kent by the River Medway.

It is obvious that this stone has been moved by humans to its present position but when and why this was done is not known. The stone was probably ploughed up from a local field. A local resident apparently claimed that it was placed against the wall so that the wheel of a cart could be wedged against it to stop the cart from rolling down the hill.

26. Great Holland Pits Nature Reserve, Potential Local Geological Site, TM20221924

Site name: Great Holland Pits Nature Reserve

Grid reference: TM 2022 1924

Brief description of site:

Former gravel pit in the Cocks Green Gravel. Now an Essex Wildlife Trust nature reserve. Site of geological interest with potential for geological education.

Summary of geological interest

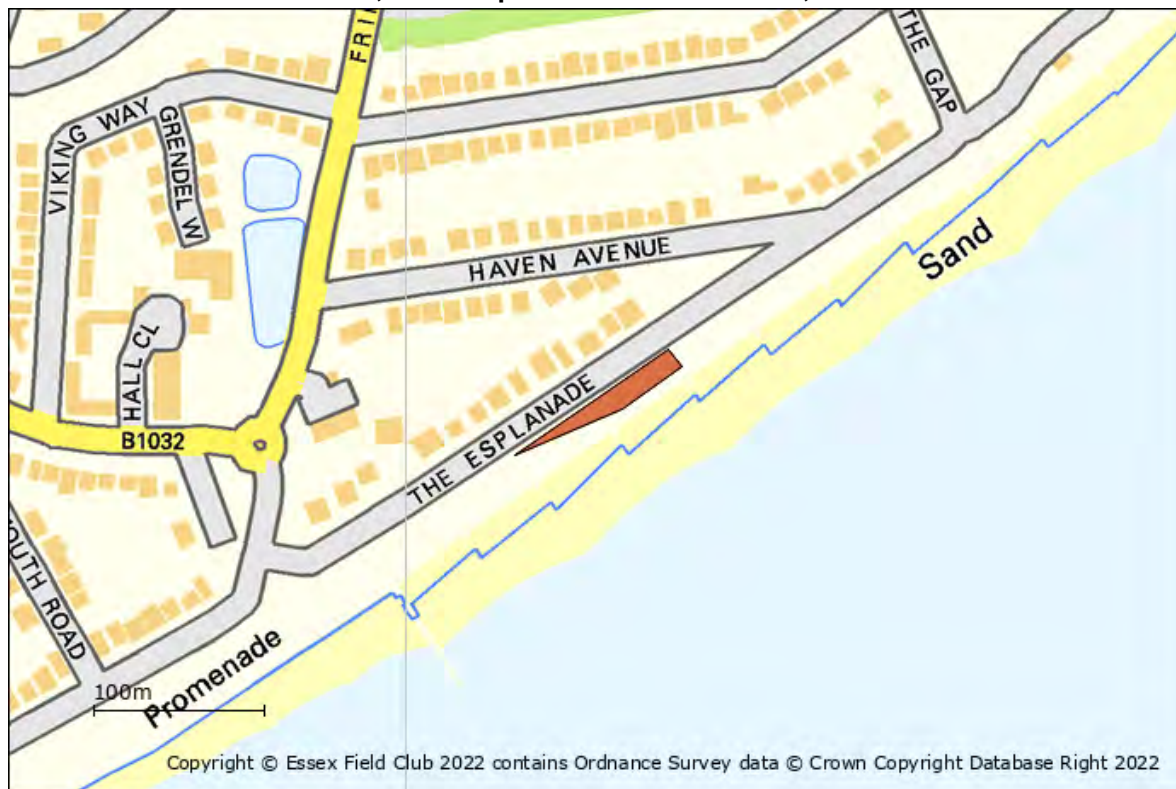

A former gravel pit in the Cocks Green Gravel (laid down by the Thames-Medway river) that is now an Essex Wildlife Trust nature reserve. No current visible exposure of gravel but there are level areas of gravel present beneath scrub that could be cleared to reveal a wide variety of rock types. These are mostly cobbles and boulders left behind by the quarry operations. There is an opportunity here to promote geology by exposing these areas of gravel and allowing visitors to identify rock types and speculate on how they got here. The Cocks Green Gravel is about 600,000 years old.

Unfortunately it is not possible to create a vertical section through the gravel beds as all gravel banks in the reserve appear to be heaps left over from quarrying operations.

Site name: Holland-on-Sea Cliff SSSI

Grid reference: TM 211166

Brief description of site:

Summary

Site of Special Scientific Interest designated for the importance of its geology. The gravel in the cliff at Holland-on-Sea dates from just before and just after the Thames was diverted and therefore is important for research into the evolution of the Thames and its tributaries during the Ice Age.

Site description

About 450,000 years ago a catastrophic change affected the Thames causing it to alter its course and adopt the route we know today. The gravel in the cliff at Holland-on-Sea dates from just before and just after the Thames was diverted (Lower Holland Gravel and Upper Holland Gravel). The stone content of the Lower Gravel is typically of a mixture of stone types from the early Thames and the Medway, indicating that this area was the confluence of the two rivers. The Upper Gravel includes Rhaxella chert brought in by meltwater streams from the Anglian ice sheet. The deposits reveal just how rapid the diversion was as the Thames suddenly ceased to flow through central Essex as a result of being blocked upstream between Hertfordshire and Colchester by the Anglian ice sheet. Gravel of the same age is present in St. Osyth Gravel Pit. St. Osyth lies upstream from the confluence with the Thames and Medway rivers whereas Holland-on-Sea lies within the area of the confluence.

The cliffs have been landscaped and no gravel is now visible. However, in late 2018 cliff protection works provided temporary exposures and the opportunity for sections in the gravel to be studied again.

28. Little Oakley Channel Deposit SSSI, Site of Special Scientific Interest, TM223294

Summary

Site of Special Scientific Interest designated for the importance of its geology. The site consists of an interglacial channel, part of the Kesgrave Sands and Gravels, which was laid down by a former course of the River Thames, at the point where it may have been joined by the early River Medway. It has yielded numerous fossils. There are no current exposures.

Site description

Many important fossil discoveries depend on the right person being in the right place at the right time and the Little Oakley channel is a classic example of this.

During the Summer of 1939, only a few months before the outbreak of the Second World War, a sewer trench was being dug along the road through Little Oakley and the excavation was noticed by amateur geologist Samuel Hazzledine Warren as he was driving through the village. The sand thrown out of the excavation was found to be rich in shells, deer antlers and mammal bones and Warren described the discovery in the pages of the Essex Naturalist in 1940. Because of the war no further investigation was carried out at the time but it is surprising that, despite the apparent importance of the discovery, the site did not receive any more attention until the 1980s. Using Warrens notes, geologists then relocated the site using mechanical excavators. Warren had correctly identified the deposit as the infilling of a river channel of the same age as the famous Cromer Forest-bed in Norfolk which dates from an early part of the Ice Age before the arrival of the Anglian ice sheet.

The channel is cut into the Oakley Gravel, part of the Kesgrave Sands and Gravels, which was laid down by a former course of the River Thames, at the point where it may have been joined by the early River Medway. The Oakley Gravel is the downstream equivalent of the Ardleigh Gravel and about 550,000 years old. The channel contains fossils that include the bones rhinoceros, giant deer, hyaena, horse, boar, vole and fish, a rich assemblage of freshwater shells and a fine pollen record which has enabled geologists to reconstruct the flora and fauna of this distant period of the Ice Age. The channel can be dated by comparing the assemblage of mollusc shells with those from sites in north Norfolk, and the pollen assemblage with sites in the Netherlands. These indicate a broadly Cromerian age, though it is not clear whether it is the same age as the interglacial deposits at Ardleigh Gravel Pit (see separate site entry) or later. This is confirmed by analysis of amino acids from mollusc shells. Although the channels exact age is still not known it is thought to be about 575,000 years old. A remnant of the much older Red Crag, for which Little Oakley is also well known (see separate site record), lies adjacent to and just below the channel deposit.

The 1980s excavation was backfilled and there is now no indication on the surface that this strip on the edge of a farm field is one of the most important geological sites in Essex.

29. Gants Pit (site of), Potential Local Geological Site, TM24083127

Site name: Gants Pit (site of)

Grid reference: TM 2408 3127

Brief description of site:

Gants Pit is a classic site of geological and archaeological interest with potential for education and research. It was the richest site for Palaeolithic hand-axes in Essex. It is a disused and infilled gravel pit which is now occupied by a primary school and playground. Any significant excavations on the site should be recorded.

Summary of geological interest

Gants Pit in Dovercourt is famous as the richest site for Palaeolithic hand-axes in Essex. It was situated on the west side of the junction of the main Harwich Road and Parkeston Road and is named after the former tenant of Pound Farm, Mr. W. Gant, who leased the land. It is sometimes referred to as Pound Farm Pit. The site is now levelled and occupied by Spring Meadow Primary School and playing field.

The first discoveries were made in 1908 by a Lieut.-Colonel W. Underwood who, while walking in the area, noticed gravel being worked at this spot which was a farm field overlooking the Stour valley. He suspected that it was a likely spot for flint implements and interviewed the workmen. They informed him that they knew nothing of such objects but had collected a large number of bones, which they had sold to a passing rag and bone merchant! Underwood searched the piles of gravel on the floor of the pit and did indeed find evidence of worked flints. He returned to the pit on a later occasion with representative examples of Palaeolithic implements for the men to see, and asked them to look out for such things. This proved to be great success and over 150 hand-axes were found in just three years.

The site was independently discovered by the Essex amateur geologist and prehistorian Samuel Hazzledine Warren who took a particular interest in the hand-axes and managed to persuade the workmen to write in pencil on the implements the depth at which they found them. The results of this exercise demonstrated that the implements were found throughout the 9 foot (3 metre) depth of the pit but they had a greater surface patina the higher up they were in the gravel. This showed the weathering effect of the percolation of ground water over thousands of years. A few of the hand-axes were very slightly rolled but most were in fresh condition with no abrasion, which meant that the river hadn't transported them very far. Warren therefore concluded that this was the debris of an important Palaeolithic living site that had been washed by the river into a bank of gravel and sand.

The pit ceased working in the 1920s. The site is now levelled and occupied by Spring Meadow Primary School and playing field. There has, however, recently been renewed interest in the site and investigations were carried out in 2001 by a team of archaeologists and geologists led by David Bridgland. This was following up on an observation that gravel with Palaeolithic flakes was exposed in the foundations for a southern extension of the school in the 1980s. Several Palaeolithic flakes were recovered in 2001, leading to further excavations in 2006 when three trenches were dug using a JCB excavator in different parts of the site. One trench revealed fragments of fossil mammal bone and a number of Palaeolithic artefacts, which appears to confirm that the mammal fauna and the artefacts came from the same gravel. These investigations established the approximate extent of the gravel remaining beneath the site, which may hold further information about the climate and wildlife of the area when these early humans were living here. It is also hoped to establish an accurate age for the site. The results also found that the original gravel pit was quite small, probably no larger than the footprint of the main school buildings, which makes the large number of hand-axes found all the more remarkable. The investigations were hampered by waterlogged conditions at the base of the trenches that reached the impervious London Clay bedrock. A surprising discovery, however, was made at the base of the trench at the eastern corner of the site. Here was found a thin remnant of Red Crag, consisting of sand with numerous fossil shells, lying on top of London Clay.

A total of 208 hand axes have come from Gants Pit. Some of them were large and beautiful, and many were magnificently worked, their colour ranging from yellowish brown to lightish blue. The mammal bones found represented species such as beaver, rhinoceros, straight-tusked elephant, fallow deer, red deer and ox (aurochs). The gravel that contained the implements and bones appears to be a local terrace gravel from the Stour valley, banked up against the much older Oakley Gravel, which is of Thames-Medway origin.

Material from Gants Pit is distributed around several museums including Ipswich, Colchester, Norwich, Cambridge, Oxford and the Natural History Museum in London. The majority of the hand-axes are in the British Museum.

30. Beacon Cliff, Potential Local Geological Site, TM262317

Site name: Beacon Cliff

Grid reference: TM262317

Brief description of site:

Beacon Cliff is a site of geological interest with potential for geological education. Coastal cliff with former exposure of Red Crag and London Clay. Site of considerable historical interest.

Summary of geological interest

In 1704 the naturalist Samuel Dale described a cliff of sand containing fossils at Beacon Cliff, Harwich that appears to be the first record of the East Anglian Crag deposits in the scientific literature. The fossiliferous sand is now known as the Red Crag but unfortunately this exposure, which lay on top of the London Clay, has now been lost due to coastal erosion.

A fine illustration of this cliff was published in 1730 in Samuel Dales The History and Antiquities of Harwich and Dovercourt which was the first book to describe and illustrate fossils from Essex. In 1829 a description of the cliff was published in the Transactions of the Geological Society which tells of a much smaller exposure; and only 12 years later, in 1841, it had almost completely disappeared. In that year Essex amateur geologist John Brown wrote that the Red Crag is so reduced! by the action of the waves that only by close attention can it be traced. By 1877 the Geological Survey memoir stated that a few fragments of shells at one spot on the top were all that remained.

Relics of the Red Crag cliff can still occasionally be found on the beach in the form of durable pieces of fossil whale bone and phosphatic nodules.

The recovery of cement stones for cement manufacture from the London Clay cliffs and foreshore hereabouts led to many important fossil discoveries. The stone was dug by hand, which meant that fossils could be easily seen, recovered and sold to passing collectors. Numerous spectacular fossils of early mammals were found in the nodules together with giant turtles and other marine creatures. Many of these fossils went to the Natural History Museum in London but several are in the collections of Colchester, Ipswich and Norwich Museums. Of particular interest was the first discovery in the world of the skeleton of the earliest ancestor of the horse (see separate entry for Harwich Foreshore SSSI).

31. Harwich Foreshore SSSI, Site of Special Scientific Interest, TM263320

Summary

Site of Special Scientific Interest designated for the importance of its geology. This locality is the best exposure of the Harwich Stone Band, the most distinctive of the ash bands in the Harwich Formation at the base of the London Clay. The site extends along the foreshore from TM 263 316 to TM 263 323.

Site description

This locality is particularly important as the best exposure of the Harwich Stone Band, the most distinctive of the ash bands in the Harwich Formation at the base of the London Clay which contains volcanic ash from explosive volcanic eruptions in Scotland during Eocene times some 50 million years ago. The stone band makes this part of the coast the only naturally occurring rocky shore along the entire distance between Norfolk and Kent and may even be the reason for the existence of the Harwich peninsula. The Harwich Stone Band contains attractive veins of green banded calcite (calcium carbonate) which can be cut and polished and is one of the few decorative stones native to Essex. Samuel Dale, the Essex naturalist and author of The History and Antiquities of Harwich and Dovercourt (1730), records that in his time the streets of Harwich were cobbled with dressed stones taken from this bed.

The foreshore is also of prime importance for London Clay fossils, particularly for fossil fruits and seeds from the Eocene rainforest. Also found are fossil sharks teeth amongst the beach shingle. Harwich is also famous for numerous fossils found by the workmen employed in the Harwich cement industry. These include some of the worlds first fossils of early mammals that were beginning to spread across the globe following the extinction of the dinosaurs. The most famous fossil found was Hyracotherium, the earliest ancestor of the horse (George 2010). Fossil fish and many giant fossil turtles were also found, several of which are on display in Ipswich and Norwich museums.

The fossils from Harwich have been collected and studied for more than 300 years making this an important site in the history of geology (see separate entry for Beacon Cliff).

32. The Naze SSSI, Site of Special Scientific Interest, TM266235

Summary

Site of Special Scientific Interest designated for the importance of its geology. Spectacular cliffs of London Clay overlain by Red Crag. Extensive exposure of London Clay on foreshore. Important for Eocene fossils (particularly mammals and birds). Type locality for the Waltonian Red Crag. Also a fine example of rotational landslips.

Site description

The most spectacular exposure of Red Crag in East Anglia is at the Naze where the red, shelly sand can be seen resting on blue-grey London Clay. The Naze is one of the finest geological sites in Britain; both the Red Crag and London Clay here are of international importance and the cliffs are designated a Site of Special Scientific Interest (SSSI). The Red Crag and the overlying sediments represent a remarkably complete sequence of late Pliocene/early Pleistocene deposits which has yielded information on climatic deterioration at the beginning of the Ice Age. Digging in the cliffs is not permitted but fossil shells are numerous in the slipped masses. The cliffs can be dangerous in wet weather.

The underlying London Clay was laid down in a subtropical sea during the Eocene period, some 50 million years ago. The coastline at the time was some distance away and consisted of rainforest dominated by mangroves, similar to that found in present day Malaysia. Fruits and seeds, twigs, and logs of wood from these rainforest plants were washed into sea and can be found preserved in pyrite (iron sulphide) in great numbers on the beach beneath the cliffs. This fossil wood made up the bulk of the copperas stones, which was the raw material for the local copperas industry. The London Clay at Walton is famous for the best-preserved bird fossils of Eocene age in the world. The fossilised bones of early mammals that lived in the rainforest have also been found on the beach (see entry for Harwich). Also found amongst the beach shingle are fossil sharks teeth and fish bones. The London Clay also contains layers of volcanic ash from eruptions in Scotland during the time the London Clay sea was in existence.

The rust-red colour of the Red Crag sand and its contained fossils is the most distinctive feature of the cliffs and is due to the former presence of pyrite that was washed from the London Clay into the Red Crag and there oxidised. The final product of this chemical reaction is a red iron oxide, which has stained the sand and fossil shells producing attractive colours. Red iron oxide (ferric iron) needs contact with the air to form. Thus the thickness of the iron staining may indicate that the Red Crag was exposed to the air in what is now Essex and East Anglia for a long period before it was submerged again and the next geological stratum (the Norwich Crag) deposited. This is evidence of significant changes of sea level or uplift and subsidence of the land.

The Red Crag is 4-5 metres thick, comprising shelly sands with sedimentary structures indicating that it was deposited in underwater dunes at a water depth of 20-30 metres. The Red Crag Sea was home to an astonishing number of species of shellfish - nearly 300 species have been recorded from the Naze which shows the extraordinarily rich fauna of the Red Crag Sea which existed over what is now Essex and East Anglia about two million years ago. Some of these species have a preference for warmer waters and these seem to be less common in the younger outcrops of Red Crag in Suffolk with arctic species beginning to appear. This is taken by some to be an indication of the onset of the Ice Age, which is why the Red Crag was classed as early Pleistocene in age. This argument is not universally accepted and the Red Crag is now placed in the Pliocene.

The Pleistocene deposits overlying the Red Crag, once over 4 metres thick, have been reduced as the cliffs have receded. From the base they consist of sand, a sequence of sands, silts and clays (from which fossil pollen has been obtained), Cooks Green Gravel, further silty deposits and brickearth. The pollen assemblage is dominated by alder and silver fir but there is also a type of pollen that cannot be related to any species known today and is referred to as type X•. This species was thought to be representative of the Hoxnian interglacial stage (see entry for Clacton cliffs) but this cannot be correct, as the overlying Cooks Green Gravel is older than this. The Cooks Green Gravel was actually laid down by the River Thames when it flowed across this area before the arrival of the Anglian ice sheet. The Pleistocene sediments at the top of the cliff are noticeably contorted and deformed which was caused by the freezing and thawing of permafrost during the most recent glacial stage when the climate of the Walton area was similar to the present day arctic.

The Naze cliffs also provide a magnificent example of rotational landslips, a sight that is becoming increasingly rare as much of the coastline is subjected to coast protection works. Another example in Essex is at Hadleigh Castle near Southend. The slippage is mostly caused by water passing through the Pleistocene deposits and Red Crag and resting on the impervious London Clay, creating a spring line. This saturates and weakens the base of the Red Crag, causing the slips.

Above all, the Naze cliffs are a stunning and increasingly rare example of a natural, wild coastline which benefits wildlife and visitors alike. This is in sharp contrast to virtually every other section of high ground on the Essex coast that has been subjected to extensive coast protection work.

The Heritage Centre housed in the old lifeboat house in the town has a few fossils on display.
