

I have submitted a lengthy, written statement of objection to the proposed development which I trust has been included in your considerations.

My closing statement is to reiterate the points that this proposal has enormous environmental and social implications in the UK (and China) which are simply not outweighed by the perceived benefit of electricity generation with no storage from soon-to-be outdated technology.

The fact the proposed development will remove land currently growing food for decades against the backdrop of a global population that grows by 200,000 people per day is as baffling as it is arrogant.

Fundamentally, solar panels have no place in fields growing food. They should be on roofs sending power in the properties beneath...simple.

Accordingly, I urge you to reject this nonsensical proposal.
