

Having been brought up in the beautiful and highly productive farmland of Lincolnshire, the Mallard Pass scheme seemed initially to me to be a project that would surely never happen. Surely common sense would prevail, and early. I'm staggered that this has got to the stage it has, beautiful stone villages will be destroyed, prime farming land no longer used to produce our food, and many livelihoods affected. That Mallard Pass should even be considered is symptomatic of a complete lack of joined up thinking for our long term future. Solar is good but not on this land.
