Due to the location of this project, its affect falls on many, small rural communities rather than larger urban populations. In this area, a large number are over 70, retired and in many cases unable/uncomfortable with accessing IT. The processes that allow their opinions to be registered depend upon this technology and is therefore discriminatory towards a high proportion of the affected population who through informal discussions with myself have almost universally opposed the scheme but are unlikely to be able to make their views heard.
