

Solar panels should be on roofs not agricultural land. Farmers will not return to ruined land. They will persue another career. Associated industries will be lost as a knock on effect. Tourists will no longer wish to visit - Industrial Solar Stations are not places one would wish to see let alone live next to, the glare on sunny days from 20 acres of pollytunnels is horrendous. The roads to and from these enormous sites proceed through three counties - a blockage on the A1 or M62 already creates havoc, imagine the impact that will descend on the country roads and connecting villages with the vehicles involved in the project.

It is clearly obvious that there is much profit to be had in the Solar industry or there would not be this Gold rush north to bag land. A feature of this "consultation" has been to produce 700 pages of literature and expect the ordinary person to even download this on a normal laptop is impossible and clearly not expected to be read. The magnitude on ones mental and physical health with the impending solar sentence cannot be emphasised enough and then we will wonder what to do with the panels when in 10 years technology will have moved on.
