

I believe that it is fundamentally wrong to look at the many solar projects proposed in Lincolnshire in isolation. They are effectively all one scheme.

They will result in the industrialisation of vast tracks of land. Most people will focus their concerns upon the loss of farmland for agricultural production.

This is obviously a concern, but to my mind of more importance is the devastating impact that these schemes will have on population health; in particular, the mental health and well-being of local people. Speaking personally, these proposals have already caused significant stress, anxiety and depression. I do not believe that these concerns have adequately been reflected in the planning process or the applications.
