There is I believe in planning a word for disproportionate amount of construction , be that factories, houses block of flats ect, that word is "massing". This word is used by planning departments for reason to reject a planning application of over development as stated above.

This application, must fall into the category of "Massing".

The area around this proposed notion will end up abusing the countryside, the people who live there and future generations.

In the great tech world that these companies live in they say, in 40 years time they will return the site to what It is now. That is a lie and an impossible promise to carry out. They may be dead by then as I surely will be, but have 40 years of living a great life on the backs of others.

How are we to feed our nation if agricultural land is fed to the lions of the big buck, green back, Euro you name it? My country and its culture are fighting in an unknown sea with an undertow that slowly but effectively taking us to a land we neither know nor recognise.

Planners take note, you may in the future wish you had held on to the values that brought you into local politics, instead of bowing to the goddess of greedy people. Who is being paid? Not the local people that live near the sites. They will be unable to leave as that cannot sell their properties. Are you going to step in and help No of course not wake up and smell the coffee.

Come clean and reject this hideous proposal.
