

I do have a registration number but I don't have the time to look for it.

I don't think the proposers of any of the projects (Tillbridge, Gate Burton, Cottam, amongst others) realise just how unpopular these are. Most will be desecrating agricultural land at a time when we are so reliant on other countries for food imports. Not to mention the visual aspect of the panels. There has been no mention of compensation for any of us who will be forced to live amongst the 13,000 acres proposed, nor what happens when or if we decide to sell as a result - nobody is going to want to buy our property. Our homes will be worthless but hey - we've got another source of electricity. Yippee! We moved to Marton in 2015 as it was a semi-rural village surrounded by countryside. I just is not fair to enforce upon us this huge solar project. There have been public meetings for each in the past but some have been waved through as if the protests had not taken place. Ed Milliband (and the proposers) don't live here, so they are quite happy for these things to go ahead. Nobody listens to us - who are we after all?

Personally I don't give a jot about 'global warming' - the planet has been heating up and cooling down for millions of years. Leave our countryside and agricultural land alone. In a few years, when we have increased our population even further and cannot feed the millions, these solar companies will regret building across our farmland. Too much is already being lost to building 'executive' homes that we do not need. I just wish we were listened to!
