Brazil Minister backs down
over anthem in schools

Brazil's new education minister has been forced into a humiliating climb-down after he asked schools in the country to film students singing the national anthem in front of a Brazilian flag and being read the campaign slogan of the far-right president, Jair Bolsonaro. An email from the education minister, Ricardo Vélez Rodríguez, said: "Brazilians! Let's greet the new Brazil and celebrate quality education to be developed in our school," ending with Bolsonaro's campaign slogan: "Brazil above everything, God above everyone." It requested that schools film students being read the letter and singing the national anthem before sending the recording to the ministry.

The request sparked outrage in schools and yesterday Rodríguez said: "I recognised the mistake."

Headteachers and educational experts questioned the logic and legality of the request. Rosana Lima, an assistant head at Amaro equivalent high school in Rio de Janeiro, said: "This is surreal. Schools are overburdened with work, still matriculating students, thousands of problems, and we are going to stop and do this?"

Yesterday, the ministry said a new set of instructions would remove Bolsonaro's campaign slogan and tell schools which choose to participate that they should obtain authorisation before filming. Dom Phillips Rio de Janeiro

Iran
Rouhani urged to stop minister's departure

The Iranian president, Hassan Rouhani, is under pressure to reject the resignation of foreign minister Javad Zarif, who announced his departure on Monday and condemned the "poison" of infighting among Iran's factions. News of the diplomat's resignation, which he broke on Instagram, prompted a fall in Iran's stock exchange and a rearguard action by reformists, who called on Rouhani to refuse to accept it.

Zarif's surprise move came as the landmark nuclear deal he negotiated with world powers stands on the verge of collapse after the withdrawal of the US.

Spain Shakira summoned
over alleged tax evasion

The Colombian singer Shakira has been summoned to appear in Spain over claims that she evaded paying €14.5m (£12.4m) in taxes, Spanish media have reported.

Prosecutors argue the musician evaded taxes by claiming to live in the Bahamas when she was resident in Barcelona.

Shakira (above right) changed residences in 2015 from the Bahamas to Spain, where she lives with her partner, the Barcelona footballer Gerard Piqué, and their two sons. But prosecutors allege she was already living in the Catalan capital between 2012 and 2014, and should have paid tax in Spain on her worldwide income for those years. The Catalan newspaper El Periódico reported that a judge in Esplugues de Llobregat, Barcelona, had agreed to investigate the case and had summoned Shakira to appear in court on 12 June.

The tax authorities began investigating the singer in January last year. Shakira's lawyer said the artist had lived in a variety of places "throughout her professional career and, in every case, has fully met the laws of all the jurisdictions where she has resided".

El Periódico reported that Shakira has already paid the Spanish tax authorities €14.5m to settle the debt. Sam Jones Madrid

France Retailer cancels sports
hijab after boycott calls

The French sports store Decathlon has cancelled a plan to put a sports hijab on the market in France after several politicians, including one from Emmanuel Macron's centrist party, called for a boycott.

The running headscarf – a plain, lightweight head covering designed for female athletes, which covers the hair but not the face – is already on sale in Morocco and was to be extended to France and worldwide.

But after a social media storm and outrage from some politicians against Muslim head coverings, the company backtracked and said the garment would not go on sale "at the present time" in France.

Fiona Lazaar, an MP from Macron's party, tweeted that it was a shame Decathlon had given in to what she called "racist threats". Angélique Chrisafis Paris

Plymouth City Council secures further funding for fishermen's safety

New entrants to the fishing industry at Plymouth will be among the local fishermen to benefit from the city council being awarded a second round of funding for lifejackets, following its successful initial scheme last year.

After being awarded £77,000 from the European Maritime and Fisheries Fund (EMFF) and the Maritime Management Organisation last year for the scheme, to help reduce loss of life and accidents within the local fishing industry, Plymouth City Council has secured a second round of EMFF grant support for 60 more E250 lifejackets with personal locator beacons.

Council leader Tudor Evans said: "Fishing is one of the key industries in Britain's Ocean City, but it is also one of the most dangerous, which is why we wanted to do our bit to support this important sector. "It's been a phenomenal success. Look at #wearitforthem – families of fishing crews who fish from Plymouth have been proudly sharing their pictures on social media. We've had calls from across the country, from Cornwall to the Highlands, asking about how they can copy this scheme."

The lifejackets have in-built locator beacons and were distributed by Saltash company, MarineCo. The project was designed with input from fishermen's representatives and the emergency services, to create a more co-ordinated community approach to training and equipment, to reduce the number of fishermen's lives lost at sea.

The scheme has cross-party support from councillors and MPs, as well as the Inshore Fisheries Conservation Authorities, RNLI, Maritime Coastguard Agency and, importantly, the fishermen and their families.
