I would like to object to this project and power cable.

I do believe an interconnected world is good and more reliable but not when other countries rely on nuclear power and England are transferring (slowly at present) over to renewable energy sources.

This is not wanted by local residents for the disruption it will cause the possible health implications from the installation of the cable from more traffic jams and work vehicles on an ISLAND. Possible health issues from the magnetic field created by high voltage cables.

If this project must go ahead then this cable should be run in the channel and link up to the power grid at the closest point to the ocean. To my knowledge that is not Portsmouth!!! Running cables under the sea i understand is costly and has some temporary disruptions on sea life but with all due respect that is better than disrupting the whole city! Not forgetting how densely populated we are!
