Hi there,

I categorically object to Aquind on the following grounds.

1. Green space in Portsmouth is already sparse and even more should now be destroyed to accommodate this dangerous, unpopular scheme.
2. Alan Whitehead, shadow minister of energy and climate change has already stated that this interconnector is not needed
3. All local MPs have already voted against this. Why bother having a democracy if it's so apparently flawed.
4. As a resident of Portsmouth, recent floods are significant indications that our city is vulnerable enough without heavy disturbances from the proposed digging that comes with the scheme
5. The French government has already rejected it
6. It's evident that any such schemes lobbied by individuals only benefit a few at the top with very few ethical considerations.

I hope that the petitions, demonstrations and cross-party objections are hitting home and that this project will be shelved, or at least moved to an area that is not one of the most densely populated in the country

Our current government have little dignity and respect from the very people they are supposed to govern at the moment so let's not make things worse

Best regards,
Adam withers
