Dear Sir/ Madam,

I am writing, again, to add my voice to the large number of people who are objecting to Aquind's project.

Portsmouth is a heavily-populated city where the traffic frequently grinds to a halt. Major work, such as Aquind will need across Portsea Island and its environs, will inevitably create further massive difficulties.

In addition, we already rely on other countries to top up our energy supplies. We should be focusing on developing our own resources so that we no longer need to be reliant on foreign supplies (from countries which may themselves be struggling).

I find it a sad reflection of modern life that those with the most money can keep pursuing a selfish dream when those who would oppose it have little spare cash to continue to fight!

Yours faithfully,

Janet Sage
