Want proof? Look at the Devils Punchbowl.

The tunnel was put in that vastly improved traffic and the green lanes were left intact for all to enjoy responsibly.

This means that in the event of accident that there are well defined accesses through that the emergency services could use without resorting to an air ambulance. Also, the removal of vehicle rights on a route often results in it becoming over-grown and impassable on foot to ramblers and horses.

If the tunnel was put in it would stop the jams caused by people slowing to look at Stonehenge as they pass it, I've been stuck for hours by those jams so know something needs to be done such as a tunnel or a total re-route of the road out of the area.

Neither has any requirement to close the byways open to all traffic in the area and the Devil's Punchbowl is glowing proof of that fact.

Many thanks
