Dear Sir,

I find it almost unbelievable that plans are not being changed, given the local opposition and the glaringly obvious fact that this scheme would disturb and destroy an area of unparalleled archaeological and national importance.

Why are the conclusions of the UNESCO World Heritage committee not being taken seriously? Doesn't this government care that the monument voted Britain's favourite could be put on the At Risk register? Who in your organisation has the arrogance and conceit to think they know better than these global experts?

Please note that we object very strongly to these plans and to this ignoring of warnings. Surely some common sense needs to come into play now?

Maggy and Charles Daniell,
