Secretary of State for Transports,

Where there's a will, there's a way.

Stonehenge sits in the UK but it is a World Heritage Site and as such needs to be fully protected.

A longer tunnel is feasible, even if more expensive - how trivial to destroy the site (yes, harm, physically and by reputation) for filthy lucre!

If money is the main problem, then create the cheaper southern bypass!

It's so easy to disfigure, and also easy to respect - just a question of will.
