My objection to the tunnel is that Stonehenge is the foremost of all ancient sites in the UK and therefore of universal value to mankind, as Unesco's World Heritage Committee, which disapproves of the tunnel, has pointed out. There are other ancient sites connected to ley lines in the UK, which draw visitors and travellers to this country from all over the world. The proposed new road would set a precedent that if our major site can be damaged for the convenience of traffic, then all other sites might be treated in the same way.

Yours,
