The landscape around Stonehenge is a unique neolithic site that continues to reveal more information about the most important prehistoric area of Britain, especially as more sophisticated methods of below-ground investigation are developed. Consider how much information we have been given about the area around the Durrington Walls in the last two years. It would be folly to dig a vast tunnel through such a rich and sensitive site.

The A303 is a monstrous intrusion on a world famous monument. It needs to be rerouted some miles away from Stonehenge. The Govt will say the costs are too great, but billions have been found when the pressure is on, as in the time of covid. Wait for another couple of years to get over current problems, take a deep breath , and go for the expensive rerouting. It only needs to be done once! Later generations will be so grateful! But DON'T dig the tunnel.
