To whom it may concern

One day I intend to take our granddaughters (currently ages [REDACTED]) to visit the World Heritage Site of Stonehenge.

I want them to see the site as a whole, including barrows and rolling landscape.

I want to be able to show them sunsets and sunrises across a landscape unmarked by modern man so they can picture this unique area without too much imagination.

I want them to walk this special landscape as it is now.

I object to the construction of a tunnel in this area. I deeply object, as a Druid, to my sacred landscape being ripped open to reduce car journey times by only minutes. Such damage will be irreparable. Our collective history deserves better planning, or our descendants will (quite rightly) condemn us for savage and wanton destruction

My granddaughters deserve their history intact.

Thank you

Mrs Harvey
