Dear Sir

I have seen the widespread mayhem of the landscape when major roads are being built eg M3 through the South Downs.

I am firmly of the opinion that the Stonehenge complex can only become more complex and revealing of our common heritage as more technology explodes our knowledge of this World Heritage Site. The last ten years have revealed more and more of the complexity and indeed European dimensions of our past.

The road is certainly an eyesore right now and inefficient for transport purposes. It needs to be re routed significantly farther away from this complex of ancient evidence. A tunnel might well be catastrophic.

Be far more radical. Current and future generations will think we were crazy if we mess with this landscape.
