This pointless hugely expensive exercise of back and forth nonsense regarding the A303 tunnel fiasco should be stopped immediately. For what it has cost in survey alone would have funded the sensible option of building a road beside the existing single stretch of road thus making it a dual carriageway thereby removing the bottleneck that is the problem. Added to that would limit the damage to the archeology that a tunnel would cause, not to mention the water table that is there. One can only assume that the main reason for certain individuals pushing this so hard is that they stand to make huge amounts of money dishing out contracts, politicians included!

Make the whole stretch of A303 a dual carriageway is cheaper faster to achieve and far far less damaging.
