Dear Sir,

In response to the UNESCO Mission's statement and the reply from National Highways on the above, I would just like to say that Stonehenge is an historical site of the first order. It should not be subjected to short-term planning which could adversely affect it in terms of pollution. I feel it would be damaging to the whole area in that what should be a place of tranquillity and reflection would become impacted by traffic racing past. The atmosphere could be entirely lost.

I would also remind the Government that more roads does not lead to less congestion, just more cars travelling from place to place.

yours faithfully,

C Craib
