Hi,

I am writing with regards to the latest comments made regarding the works due to take place at Stonehenge.

As someone with religious links to the Stonehenge site, I feel that National Highways have not given the UNESCO Advisory Mission's report enough consideration. I do not agree with the National Highways conclusion that a longer tunnel would not be worth the expense.

Stonehenge is a globally recognised site of importance and of great cultural and spiritual importance to the people of the UK. I believe that there is a duty of care present to preserve this site as best possible and do not believe the current plans to do this. I support what has been said in the UNESCO Advisory Report and believe that a Southern bypass or other less damaging scheme should be used.

Thank you for taking time to read this.
Kind regards,
Amy Jennings
