1 SCOPE OF CULTURAL HERITAGE GAZETTEER

1.1 Overview

- 1.1.1 This Cultural Heritage Gazetteer comprises a list of heritage assets, located within a defined study area, that are relevant to the cultural heritage assessment for the Proposed Development. The spatial scope of the study area is detailed in Section 10.3 of Chapter 10: Cultural Heritage [AS-077] of the Environmental Statement (ES) and has been agreed with the statutory consultees.
- 1.1.2 The gazetteer comprises designated heritage assets from the National Heritage List for England (NHLE) and non-designated heritage assets from the Historic Environment Record (HER) for Hertfordshire County Council and Central Bedfordshire Council. The gazetteer also comprises historic landscape features and a list of cultural heritage investigations carried out within the defined study area.
- 1.1.3 In addition, the gazetteer contains records that are not recorded on NHLE or the HERs and have instead been identified from desk-based assessment carried out for the Proposed Development. These records are identified in the gazetteer in Section 3 of this appendix by the prefix 'AEC'.

1.2 Summary of Impact and Harm

- 1.2.1 While there is no direct correlation between the significance of effect in Environmental Impact Assessment (EIA) terms and the degree of harm referenced in the National Planning Policy Framework (NPPF), it is acknowledged that those assets which are identified as experiencing a significant adverse effect are more likely to experience substantial harm.
- 1.2.2 As such, assets where a significant effect has been predicted in Chapter 10: Cultural Heritage [AS-077] of the ES are further assessed in Appendix D Heritage Statement [APP-198] of the Planning Statement [AS-122]. The Heritage Statement considers the potential harm to these heritage assets in accordance with the NPPF to enable the planning balance to be undertaken in weighing harm against the public benefit.
- 4.1.41.2.3 As part of the systematic assessment of potential impacts to cultural heritage assets, many heritage assets were scoped out from the impact assessment process as the Proposed Development would result in no impact to their heritage value, either from physical impacts or through changes to their setting. To capture this process, the gazetteer includes a record of the likely effect arising from the Proposed Development for each heritage asset, and also includes a brief rationale for its scoping out from the detailed impact assessment in the ES. Where a potential impact has been assessed in the ES, an assessment of the likely harm is also recorded in the gazetteer.

			Thomas Becket before 1170, and dissolved c.1540. It was located to the east of Spittlesey or Spittlesea Wood, an area now occupied by Luton Airport. The Tithe Map of 1842 gives the name as "Spitalsea", the name "Spital" derived from "Hospital". The location of the hospital was said to be in Hassex Wood, which was cut down before 1855, at which time a hoard of 89 silver pennies dating from the reigns of Henry VII and Henry VIII and in mint condition were found. These were probably associated with the hospital.				and site has been developed.

EBD447	Aerial Photograph Interpretation	Land South of Luton Airport: Interpretation of Aerial Photographs for Archaeology	The Study Area contains a Scheduled moated [sic] site at Someries castle, which is very clearly visible as upstanding earthworks, particularly on aerial photos taken in the 1940s. There are also outlying earthworks around the central core of the moated site which are not scheduled and are recorded by this assessment. The Study Area also contains buried ditched sub rectangular enclosures, of possible Iron Age or Romano British date, which may be much more extensive than shown by the fragmentary crop-marked features which were visible on the occasions they were photographed in 1973 and 1984. Other features include embanked former woodland and field boundaries, possible parkland features and a series of possible pits, the origin of which is not apparent from the aerial photographic evidence. Natural features and areas of possible disturbed ground also show as marks in crops and are differentiated from archaeological features where possible.	TL 1314 202	Within Application Site
EBD553	DBA	Cultural Heritage Desk Top Assessment of Runway Replacement Options for London Luton Airport	A desk-based assessment was undertaken of the runway replacements options for London Luton Airport. Conclusions: Archaeological mitigation measures include archaeological evaluation and excavation; dissemination of the results with the public and relevant authorities, and to develop a future management/conservation plan to enhance public awareness of Someries castle. EBD692	Fieldwalking	Winch Hill Farm, Luton; Fieldwalking Survey	The probable site of a Romano-British building was field walked and surveyed by the Manshead Society in 1996. The site, threatened by development, was particularly evident following cultivation. The location of possible buildings was shown by patches of lighter gravelly soil, linear scatters of flints (suggesting wall lines) and scatters of tegula, imbrex, flue and brick tiles (including examples in shell grit fabrics) with fragments of opus signinum mortar. Coarseware sherds were recovered as well as a conglomerate quernstone fragment. Prehistoric sherds and worked flints were also found around the site. The surface evidence suggests the site and remains of at least one substantial building, with perhaps a hypocaust and/or bath house (or a building which included re-used material). Finds are to be forwarded to Luton Museum.	TL 1325 2186	Within Application Site
EBD1242	Trial Trench Evaluation	A note on an Iron Age and Roman site at Wigmore Valley Park, Luton	During the Spring of 1997 Luton Borough Council had an anti-traveller trench dug in Wigmore Valley Park (TL 12 21) alongside the airport emergency access road at the eastern edge of the park. The trench was c.1m in depth and 0.6m wide. Evaluation of the spoil heaps, by the writer, indicated several archaeological features had been disturbed along the line of the trench, with finds of neolithic-Bronze Age flintwork, Iron Age, Romano-British and medieval sherds. EBD1851	Watching Brief	East Luton Corridor, Luton; Archaeological Monitoring Report	A number of sites of archaeological potential were highlighted in the Environmental Statement for the scheme. The monitoring of groundworks in these areas revealed no significant archaeological features, deposits or artefacts.	TL 1073 2039	Within Application Site
EBD1241	Fieldwalking	Fieldwork around North-East Luton 1989-90	During 1989-90 an area of about 1km ² around north-east Luton was sample surveyed for archaeological surface finds. The survey area included: development sites at Wigmore, parkland and gardens, as well as fields between Cockernhoe and Tea Green and part of the route of a gas pipe from Copt Hall to Lilley. The majority of finds were of worked flint, probably late Neolithic or Bronze Age in date. A few Mesolithic blade fragments were found at Copt Hall and Vauxhall Park, these were with later flint working scatters, and suggest a prehistoric preference for these upland, clay with flints covered, sites. Burnt flints, clay and many flint flakes were found at TL 116 223. Sherds of Iron Age pottery have been found at TI 128218. From the same area, finds of Romano-British potsherds, tegulae, brick, imbrex and flue tile fragments suggest the site of a substantial Roman building. A small scatter of medieval pottery was found at Wandon End Farm TI 135 227. Slight remains of ridge and furrow and other earthworks survive near Cockernhoe; and ploughed out lynchets have been observed in a pipeline section to the North of Tea Green. EBD1243	Geophysical Survey	Wigmore Valley Park, Luton	A resistivity survey was carried out in Wigmore Valley Park, Luton in April 2004; this indicated several features of high resistance, including some evidence for a substantial structure. Alongside the airport emergency access road, some 20m to the east of the survey area, an anti-traveller trench was dug in 1996. This cut through an extensive range of Roman occupation features (flint surfaces, pits and ditches) and produced finds of Roman tile and potsherds of 1st-4th century date identified by the writer (Hudspith, 1999). EHT7037	Evaluation	Evaluation of land east of Luton, south-west of Brickkiln Wood, Offley 2010	47 trial trenches across the two fields between the county boundary along the edge of Luton, and the track leading from Wandon End to Brickkiln Wood, revealed only a small number of features and these were probably post-medieval. Clayey silt ploughsoil overlay silty clay subsoil, largely colluvial at the base of the slope; beneath was clay-with-flints natural, with an outcrop of weathered chalk on the lower slope. EBD338	Geophysical Survey	Someris Castle, Hyde, Bedfordshire	Geophysical survey undertaken at Someris Castle. A number of anomalies of possible archaeological origin were identified. Positive linear anomalies within the gradiometer data indicate the presence of cut features, as do negative area anomalies within the resistance data. A number of the anomalies relate directly to the earthworks whereas others may be related to earlier activity on the site.	TL 11898 20116	1km study area

EBD1398	DBA	Somerles Castle: Some Reconsiderations	A trial trench across the moat and on to the lip of the inner mound was begun, but not finished. The trench was cut across the south bank and ditch, 29.25m from the south-west corner at the top of the bank. Six inches of humus overlay the whole of the area excavated. Beneath this on the counter-scarp bank was a capping of hard, compact, brown clay but with some stones including flints; this represents bank make-up, but the abandonment of the excavation meant that the depth of this layer could not be ascertained. The outer ditch was not excavated. The inner bank was capped by a layer of hard, compact, brown clay make-up with stones, similar to that on the counter-scarp. Beneath this	TL 1188 2008	1km study area

			was a layer of flints and other small stones in brown clay representing stony make-up of the bank. On the south-east side of the bank this finished abruptly, but on the north-west side it thinned out down the slope. Below this layer was a layer of light brown loamy earth with a few small clay patches, again representing bank make-up. The depth of this layer was not ascertained. At the centre of the inner ditch (or yard, according to Dyer (1966, 66-67)) was an almost horizontal layer of stones of undiscovered depth. At the south-east side this was overlapped by a shallow layer of brown earth and at the north-west side by a layer of light brown, loamy earth containing numerous small stones. On the surface of the central layer of stones were found sherds of sixteenth and seventeenth century bellarmines. The uppermost layer on the inner mound was a layer of stones containing small amounts of charcoal and a few brick and tile fragments of indeterminate date. Beneath this was a layer of light brown, loamy soil with many stones in it. Below this, and running across the trench, was a band of dense brown clay about three feet wide. A setting of fairly largish flints was in this clay, but no definite pattern was made by these and they may be a purely fortuitous feature and of no significance. In all layers (except the humus) on the inner mound and in the inner ditch small sherds of poor domestic pottery of thirteenth century date were found together with one sherd of fourteenth century poor domestic ware. The finding of thirteenth century pottery indicates occupation of the site at that date, thus confirming the evidence of the Calendar of Inquisitions Post Mortem; but it does
