To Whom it may concern,

I moved to south luton in 1985. I purchased a property in south luton; [REDACTED] in 1988. At this time it was hardly noticeable that an airport was in existence due to the low level of traffic. The increase in flights since then has been staggering.

The residents of south luton have not been consulted upon the huge increase in air traffic. The massive expansion in luton airport and the huge increase in flight traffic has completely ignored the residents of south luton.

The huge increase in flight traffic has brought misery to the residents of south luton. The noise pollution destroys any pretence of quality of life. The toxic air pollution destroys any pretence of clean air. If these 2 factors did not make life miserable enough then the additional deterioration of sleep quality is the final step in ruining any scope or hope of a normal functioning life in south luton.

Even if you ignore the misery that flight expansion creates for the suffering residents of south luton. The expansion makes a complete mockery of any government plans regarding achievement of net zero.

If the expansion is deemed necessary for spurious economic arguments then it does seem to ignore the fact that all it does is facilitate; british people to spend money that was earnt in the UK on foreign holidays; doing no good for the countries balance of payments.

If the powers to be decide that expansion is necessary may I suggest that the residents of south luton are supported financially so that they have an opportunity to leave the area and it is accepted that south luton is a no go zone. The expansion plans will make the area a no go zone for any semblance of quality of life.

Yours sincerely

Johan Ward
