I understand it's claimed that there has been no significant change that would alter the current approved policy on expanding the airport. The change is that we have all been told what is happening to our planet and therefore we now need to act: to stop encouraging people to fly, and to stop seizing and destroying land to make more space for cars to park. This policy of airport expansion is simply a way to say "We don't give a damn what happens to people and the planet as long as there are a few people around who can make a fast buck out of the destruction." You don't think that's a change? -- Yann van Heurck, Madison CT
