The government has today, 5.11.18, announced a policy placing a responsibility on individuals and employers to take steps to keep everyone as healthy as possible, using the statement that prevention is better than a cure.

In view of this, it is difficult to understand how the Roxhill Developments proposal can possibly be given the go-ahead as the site is in an area where air pollution is already higher than the accepted limit and the greatly increased number of car and lorry movements can only make the pollution level considerably greater. This pollution will be borne towards the local residents by the prevailing wind which is from the south west. This will be greatly to the detriment of the health of the local residents and is bound to have an even greater impact on the long term health of children. Also in terms of concern for health, the 24 hour working with its noise and the consequent noise from the numerous heavy vehicle movements is likely to prevent local residents from getting sound sleep which will also be detrimental to their health and well-being.

It is therefore to be hoped that any governmental decision will be bound by its stated policy.
